$30,000 Given To Pro-Nazi Paper by Mystery Man

Cash Was Tossed Through Window, Passed in Crowds to Wisconsin Editors

By Dillard Stokes
Post Staff Writer

Lake Geneva, Wis., Nov. 27.—One dark night somebody crept up to the living room window, tossed $15,000 inside and hurried away without saying why.

A man came up in a New York crowd, handed over a parcel of several thousand dollars in new bills and slipped away without saying who he was.

And one bright summer afternoon $15,000 turned up on a table in the downstairs hallway.

That's where the money came from, say the men behind the anti-British Herald, of which 14 issues have been edited in this shiningly clear, fundamentally American little resort city.

A Slick Paper

No crude Nazi propaganda sheet or blatantly unreasoning anti-interventionist handbill is the Herald. It has a professional finish, a "slick paper" sophistication paralleling that of its sister publication, Scribner's Commentator, issued monthly by the same staff but sponsored by a different corporation.

Several executives and employes of the Lake Geneva offices of Scribner's and the Herald already have been summoned to Washington to testify before the special grand jury on German agents there.

Doubtless these will be recalled and possibly more sent for when Special Prosecutors William Power Maloney and Edward J. Hickey, jr., of the propaganda squad of Department of Justice prosecutors, turn their attention to the mysterious benefactor who put up the cash so self-effacingly.

Witnesses Recalled

Two witnesses previously examined—Douglas M. Stewart, co-publisher, and George T. Eggleston, editor—are scheduled to face further question in Washington tomorrow. Their recall is conjectured to be in connection with the secretly prepared master mailing list of the anti-interventionist group.

Stewart owns one-third (about $50,000) of the capital stock of P. and S. Publishing Co., publisher of Scribner's Commentator—a monthly review now circulated only by direct mailing, which has been widely accused of Nazi sympathies. The

White House Tour Nets Fort Belvoir Soldier 3 Dollars

A young selectee from Fort Belvoir was strolling by the White House yesterday, watching the squirrels at play. Three women tourists, apparently waiting for such an opportunity, rushed up before he knew they were coming.

"Won't you please take us through?" they cried. "The guard says we must be accompanied by a man in uniform. We're perfectly willing to pay."

Result: A soldier with three folding bucks in his khaki jeans.

Confessed Loveless Slayers On Way to Leesburg Trial

Boys, 16, Arrested In Appalachia Hotel With but 50 Cents

By John Morris
Post Staff Writer

Bristol, Va., Nov. 27.—A pair of dirty-looking furtive-eyed youths of 16, who hated school and work, were on their way back to Leesburg, Va., tonight, there to stand trial for the murder of Ward Loveless, 51-year-old Washington tax attorney, who was shot four times at his farm, Waverly, near Leesburg, in the early morning hours of last Monday.

The two youths—Paul Bernard Hoback, of Bluefield, W. Va., and Tommy Peters, who said he was born in Washington, D. C.—were captured at dawn today in Appalachia, Va., scarcely three days after the murder and actually before their victim had been lowered in the grave at Leesburg.

Have 50 Cents Left

They had only 50 cents between them. They got no money from Loveless, and such articles as they stole from his manor house had hardly much more than a sentimental value.

Charles Harrison, Commonwealth's attorney for Loudoun County, of which Leesburg is the seat, said today that Cumberland, Ky., police had a "complete confession" from the boys that they had robbed and attacked Loveless. He did not say that he himself got a confession from them, although he grilled the boys for two hours before they were marched away, handcuffed to each other, to the Bristol Jail.

Highlights of a story told by Hoback to Policeman Jimmy Johnson, of Cumberland, Ky., were:

Loveless was still alive when they pushed him into a china closet in his home, and placed a sideboard against it.

Fought Like Demon

Loveless fought like a demon, and was getting the best of Hoback when Peters began shooting.

Loveless gave them his wallet in an effort to appease them, but it contained no money.

Commonwealth's Attorney Harrison, who with Sheriff Paul Alexander and State Trooper E. D. Helm, went all night without sleep on the 500-mile trip down from Leesburg, said that he had an "iron-clad case" against the youths.

He said that the only thing about which he was now concerned was this—whether to yield to expected clamor for a death penalty or to recommend life sentences because of the boys' age.

The evidence against the boys, aside from the confession they made to Cumberland police, is the stolen Ford coupe and several articles stolen from Loveless or from the

CIO Mediators' Resignations Are Refused

Murray, Kennedy Asked by Roosevelt To Remain on Board

President Roosevelt has refused to accept the resignations from the National Defense Mediation Board of Philip Murray, president of the C. I. O., and Thomas Kennedy, secretary-treasurer of the United Mine Workers.

Murray, Kennedy and their alternates left the board about two weeks ago, protesting its 9-to-2 decision against the union shop demand of the U. M. W. in the captive coal mine strike.

The White House said the President had informed the two C. I. O. members by letter he would not accept their resignations and had asked them to remain as board members.

The White House did not make public the letter.

Meanwhile, negotiations for the 14 nonoperating railroad brotherhoods notified general chairmen of the unions yesterday to make "all necessary arrangements" for a strike of their 900,000 members "should this action be finally necessary."

The notice went out on the eve of a new meeting of President Roosevelt's emergency fact-finding board to attempt to avert a Nation-wide walkout of the five operating brotherhoods scheduled for December 7.

The operating brotherhoods number about 350,000 men.

The negotiating group for the nonoperating organizations has been in Washington for ten days attempting to obtain a wage increase.

After releasing the warning to the general chairmen, B. M. Jewell, head of the negotiating committee, said the group probably would "set a strike date Monday or Tuesday if we don't get a satisfactory settlement by that time."

220,000 Troops Search for Pup

With the First Army in the Carolinas, Nov. 27 (AP).—An army of 220,000 men was directed today to search for a cross-breed pet dog which had disappeared to the great grief of the 13-year-old daughter of Mrs. Robert N. Hayes, of Southern Pines.

Lieut. Gen. Hugh A. Drum, directing the field activities of the First Army in the Carolina war games, instructed commanders in every unit to ask their troops to try to locate the pup.

Senate Concurs in House Amendments to D. C. Rent Bill

The District emergency rent control bill was on its way to the White House last night after the Senate had concurred in a final House amendment to the measure.

Swift passage followed a clarifying statement on the purpose of the amendment by Senator Burton (Republican), of Ohio, who spoke in the absence of Chairman McCarran of the Senate District Committee.

Senator Burton said of the amendment:

"It is intended to give relief in the case of some rentals which, even on January 1, 1941, (the freezing date provided in the bill) already were higher than those generally prevailing for comparable housing accommodations.

"In the light of the purposes of the act, rentals of housing accommodations are not to be determined under the cumbersome and almost endless procedure of determining public utility rates for service, based upon proofs of original cost, investment value, cost of reproduction less depreciation, or any other complicated rate base.

"It is intended that there be a readily ascertainable standard of rentals determined by those generally prevailing for comparable

House Vote Due Today On Prices Bill

Majority Leaders Map Compromise To Save Measure From Recommittal

By Robert De Vore
Post Staff Writer

The Democratic high command in the House yesterday spent the pre-Roosevelt Thanksgiving trying to find something for the Republicans to be thankful for when the Administration's price-control bill comes to a scheduled final vote today.

There were indications last night that the Republicans will be offered compromises, but the leaders urged caution in making predictions.

Speaker Rayburn, Majority Leader McCormack and Democratic members of the Banking Committee met at intervals throughout the day in an effort to map out a plan to save the bill at least from recommittal, if not to preserve the form desired by the President.

Vote Expected Today

It was apparent that the majority leadership sought strategic position from which to oppose a dangerous coalition of Republicans and conservative Democrats when a showdown vote on the measure comes before today's adjournment. But what the strategy will be, where the concessions, if any, are to be made, apparently had not been finally determined last night.

At the close of a long conference attended by the top leaders and all but two majority members of the committee—one of many similar parleys held during the day—Rayburn gave reporters a statement that emphasized the responsibility of the House in combating rising living costs. The speaker said:

"I think in order to prevent runaway prices carrying mounting costs of living and an inflation which may become uncontrollable, it is vitally necessary that price control legislation be enacted.

Expects Passage

"With these things in view which are certain, I think, to come about unless control legislation is enacted, I do not believe that a majority of the members of the House will assume the responsibility of defeating this legislation."

The price bill contains authority for an administrator to place ceilings on commodity prices and to enforce price determinations through penalty provisions. Price Administrator Leon Henderson, slated to continue in that office under the legislation, has declared he will control inflation through price ceilings on a relatively small list of key commodities.

The coalition has placed the entire bill in jeopardy through its determined opposition to three features of the legislation, two of which are to be offered today as committee amendments. These features are:

1. Provision of licensing powers sufficient to enable the administrator to prevent a producer from selling a commodity on which he has violated the ceiling price. Exercise of the powers, in some

Thin Steel Line

By Edward Kennedy
Associated Press Staff Writer

Cairo, Nov. 27.—British imperial troops today smashed Axis tank lines 4 miles north of the recaptured battleground of Rezegh to make a junction with the besieged defenders of Tobruk, the high command announced.

This vital desert meeting occurred at Ed Duda on the tenth day of the Libyan offensive. That point itself was captured by the Tobruk troops in a stab which carried 10 miles outside their defenses.

New Zealand troops, supported by American-British tanks and planes, joined with Tobruk's men in a push from the south after overcoming violent Axis opposition. The desert point of Bir el Hamed was taken en route.

[The United Press reported from London that the Italians and Germans are launching violent counter-blows with armored forces and infantry.]

Axis Pockets Still Formidable

Thus the British now have a tenuous communication line curving over 100 miles from the Egyptian border near Sidi Omar northwestward to Tobruk.

The link with Tobruk may be a decisive turning point in the whole campaign, a military spokesman said, but he emphasized that "formidable pockets of Axis resistance" still exist on all sides of that narrow line.

In addition the Axis still holds strong positions on a 30-mile arc rimming Tobruk which must be broken if the royal navy is to feed more men and equipment effectively into Tobruk for transportation southward to the churning battle arena of Rezegh.

'One Further Effort'

Moscow Exhorts Defenders To Hold as Nazis Gain Anew

By Daniel T. Brigham

Berne, Switzerland (Friday), Nov. 28.—"Hold we must—and will—through these next few days of strain if we are to make of this final thrust of the enemy the turning point for his final defeat. We must check the enemy's offensive and bleed him white." This was the conclusion of a dramatic appeal for "one further effort toward a stubborn and selfless defense" of Moscow addressed to the city's defenders by a political commissar in the name of the commander of the Moscow sector on the Russian radio early this morning.

This appeal came at the end of a day's fierce fighting, during which the enemy had succeeded in making further slight advances both south of the city and on the northern sector—not toward the city's defenses themselves but, far more ominously, toward the encirclement of Moscow and the cutting of its communications with the rest of Russia.

The Russian military spokesman admitted the situation had become grave, but not hopeless.

Yesterday's fighting began on the northwestern defenses, where a heavy German tank attack to the south and around the town of Volokolamsk after several hours of bitter fighting enabled the Germans to isolate for a time several large forces of Russian troops. Striking hard with what means they had at their disposal, the Russians, after admittedly abandoning a "considerable amount of campaign material," finally succeeded in breaking their way out.

In the process, however, they also had to cede strategically important positions to the southwest of Volokolamsk, from which the Germans, quick to capitalize on this first im-

Management, Labor Blast Arbitration

Plant Seizure Plan Seen as Alternative In Ramspeck Bill

By Robert C. Albright
Post Staff Writer

Compulsory arbitration features of the Administration-favored Ramspeck defense labor bill hit a snag in the House Labor Committee yesterday after opposition testimony from both labor and management.

For a compromise, Representative Ramspeck (Democrat), of Georgia, last night turned to the Connally "plant-seizure" bill as a remedy if conciliation and mediation fail to ward off defense strikes.

Following a day-long session the House Labor Committee will be asked to vote this morning on a bill to be sent to the House next week.

Ramspeck said he will first offer his "cooling-off period" and enforced arbitration measure, but feared it would fail. In that event, Ramspeck indicated he would have ready a composite of mediation provisions of his own and seizure features of the Connally plan.

Showdown Next Week

As committees on both sides of the Capitol rushed strike-curbing measures for a probable showdown next week, opposition from both A. F. L. and C. I. O. to any legislation whatever crystallized in a call for a conference here Monday by representatives of all C. I. O. affiliated unions.

Philip Murray, C. I. O. president, wired the affiliates to come to Washington "to discuss and take whatever action may be necessary regarding antistrike legislation."

"Your cooperation and assistance in this regard is essential if labor is to be protected against the early enactment of such repressive legislation," James B. Carey, C. I. O. secretary, said in the wire sent for Murray.

Earlier, both Carey and William Green, president of the A. F. of L., had testified before different Congressional committees against com-

Germans Open Big Offensive Against Serbs

Major Campaign Begun in Wide Area; Open Revolt in Croatia

By the United Press

Berlin, Nov. 27.—Strongly reinforced German troops, supported by native "volunteer" units, are engaged in a major offensive against organized Serb guerrillas in a wide area of former Yugoslavia, reliable sources revealed today.

At least 1800, and probably a far larger number, of Serbs continuing to resist the German occupation forces have been killed this month in battles with compatriots siding with the Germans, official or semi-official reports from Belgrade indicated. Fifteen hundred others have been captured.

An authorized German spokesman here did not believe the Germans would carry their offensive to the point of razing Belgrade and exterminating its populace, as President Roosevelt said yesterday he had learned to be their intention. Premier Dusan Simovitch, head of the Yugoslav government in exile, had reported such a German plan in London.

The spokesman said: "It is not our method to raze cities to the ground except as part of regular military operations."

The Serbs have been warned, however, by German military proclamations, another source indicated, that "if German soldiers are fired on from any town, the town will be destroyed by fire, the male population will be taken prisoner, every other man will be shot and their property will be forfeited to the German army."

In independent Croatia, open revolt was reported in Bosnia, compelling the Italians to rush reinforcements for their army of occupation, and the Croat army to appeal for immediate volunteers.

The only area of former Yugoslavia not touched by insurrection appeared to be east of the Morava River.

The German counteroffensive, coupled with severe repressive

Japanese-American relations appeared to be moving toward a new crisis last night as authoritative reports reaching Washington indicated that Japan has massed troops in French Indo-China for a possible attack on Thailand.

The attack, it was reliably reported, may come within a week and would bring to an abrupt end the negotiations between Secretary of State Hull and Saburo Kurusu, Japan's "peace emissary" to Washington.

A Japanese invasion of Thailand (Siam), it was assumed in Washington, might touch off a Pacific war which would array against Japan the United States, Britain's Far Eastern empire, China, the Dutch East Indies and perhaps Soviet Siberia.

Thais Recall U. S. Assurances

Early today, in a broadcast, Premier Luang Bipul Songgram, of Thailand said Britain and the United States have promised to respect Thailand's independence but that Japan merely gave assurances that it would do its utmost to promote cordial relations." The premier was quoted as saying that therefore there is a distinction between Thailand's relations with the democracies and those with Japan.

A Vichy broadcast picked up early today by N. B. C. said six additional Japanese transports, fully loaded with troops, had arrived at the French Indo-China ports of Haiphong and Hue. The Vichy radio quoted reports from Saigon stating that all civilian traffic in these ports has been suspended by Japanese police and that debarkations are being carried out under the heaviest military and police guard.

Roosevelt Summons Envoys

News of the heavy Japanese troop movements into Indo-China, which have been taking place at the same time Kurusu has been discussing with Hull possible terms of a Japanese-American settlement, came only a few hours before Tokyo's special envoy and Ambassador

12-Inch Guns Boom And Fort Andrews Nearly Falls Down

Boston, Nov. 27 (AP).—For the first time in 20 years the big 12-inch coast defense mortars at Fort Andrews roared out today and—w-h-a-m—they all but wrecked the fort.

Four times, 1946-pound projectiles thundered out of the mortar pit and as each shot was fired another bit of a wooden barracks approximately 100 feet away fluttered to the ground.

First some windows rattled out. At the second roar a window casing or two was shattered. The third time a door flopped down. And on the final boom the walls shed some of their clapboards.

School Board Approves

Red Tape to Delay Penny Milk Program Until Next Semester

The slow unwinding of official red tape by Department of Agriculture officials probably will prevent thousands of Washington's underprivileged children from enjoying the health benefits of the penny milk program before next February and the opening of the new school semester, the Post learned last night.

This disclosure followed the action of the Board of Education in unanimously indorsing a program designed to meet objections raised by agriculture officials. Approval was announced yesterday when the results of a messenger poll of eight of the nine members of the board were tabulated. A ninth member, West Hamilton, was out of town and could not be reached.

Approved by the School Board of a program satisfactory to the Surplus Marketing Administration of the Department of Agriculture was long regarded as the last remaining obstacle to be hurdled before the children would be drinking the milk.

Now it develops that a long, tortuous road is still ahead.

According to Leon J. Steck, assistant to O. M. Reed, chief of the dairy division of the SMA, the following steps must be taken before the milk will be available to Washington's needy youngsters:

1. The SMA must know officially that the Board of Education has approved the program. As yet, the SMA denies having any official knowledge of the board's action, although the messenger poll was taken with the knowledge of the SMA and was a step anxiously awaited by all persons interested in getting the milk program approved. Official knowledge is sometimes a long, tedious process, it was explained. For instance, mail must be properly routed, and that step alone often takes a day or two.

2. The program suggested by the School Board must be carefully studied by the proper authorities. Steck declined to state how many authorities were involved, although he said that "the usual official channels" were involved.

3. If the program is approved as it stands, work may be started on setting up the distribution machinery. First step in this process is to secure a survey of the school system to see where the milk is to go. Such a survey would take two to three weeks. If a survey

Maxton, N. C., Has Great Time As 'Chutists Capture Airport

By Marshall Andrews
Post Staff Writer

Maxton, N. C., Nov. 27.—This peaceful little town got the shock of its life today when for one noisy hour it became the most important military spot in the United States.

In that time its airport was captured by a half-thousand tough young men who dropped in on it from the sky, bringing their weapons along with them. Maxton caught its breath, then swarmed out to the airport in a dusty cavalcade on foot, in automobiles, on bicycles and muleback.

Schools closed, business came to a standstill, the town was deserted when 25 huge brown airplanes droned overhead, circled the airport and disgorged a show the like of which Maxton probably will never see again.

From the first of these flying monsters, Maxton saw red, green and orange parachutes whip out in the wind and float lazily earthward. From airplanes behind white parachutes streamed away, with tiny dots dangling from them, swaying slowly in a great storm of gigantic snowflakes.

Thailand Warns Citizens of Peril

If Japan Invades—

Thailanders Will Fight, Envoy Warns

By Lee Carson
International News Service Staff Writer

A dapper little man with a New England accent spoke last night for the fiercely independent people of his faraway country, saying flatly:

"Japan will go through Thailand over our dead bodies."

As the Japanese forces nudged the border between French Indo-China and the little buffer state of Thailand, their Minister to America, Mom Rajawongese Seni Pramoj, said tightly that the small but well-equipped armored and air forces of his nation stood ready to resist any invasion.

Snugged down at the modest Thai Embassy in the shadow of the magnificent ambassadorial palace of the Vichy French, the brilliant and straight-talking Pramoj emerged last night from Washington's social and diplomatic backfield to a place in the front lines.

Admitting that his country had neither the equipment nor the trained troops to fight a lone and lengthy war with the aggressor Japanese, envoy Pramoj said that this would not waver the determination of his people to fight "any invader."

If given a choice in the matter, Thailanders would far prefer, Pramoj said, not to fight anyone, but they cannot tolerate Japanese invasion. Similarly, he added, they would not lie down and let British or Americans walk over them at any other time. If Thailand is invaded, they "will welcome American, British and Dutch aid," he added.

Calls for Sacrifices To Save Homeland As Japanese Mass

By International News Service

Bangkok, Thailand, (Friday) Nov. 28.—Japanese Minister Jingo Futami was received by the Thai premier this morning for an interview which lasted more than an hour.

There was no indication of the subjects discussed. However, the interview was granted within a few hours of an appeal over the Bangkok radio last night calling upon all Thailand citizens "to strengthen the home front and be prepared to sacrifice all in defense of the homeland."

It also followed unofficial reports that Japanese troops in French Indo-China were massed on the Thailand frontier, poised for a possible invasion.

"Avoid petty squabbles with foreign elements as far as possible," the Thais were told by the official radio.

"A series of such minor incidents might easily develop into a large scale conflagration."

Manila Prepares

Manila, Nov. 27 (AP).—Tight military control of all activities in this Far Eastern outpost, perhaps even a military governorship, was believed imminent by reliable sources tonight as they surveyed possibilities stemming from all-day conferences between the big four military and civil chiefs of the Philippines.

Strengthening the belief that civilian defense again was under discussion, these sources said, was the conference between President Manuel Quezon, Lieut. Gen. Douglas MacArthur, of the Far Eastern command, and Francis B. Sayre, high commissioner. Admiral Thomas C. Hart, commander of the Asiatic fleet, took part in a later meeting.

Sayre at a press conference cautioned against drawing "inflammatory inferences" from the meetings.

Military control of all activities, including internal affairs, was essential, informants said, if there was to be complete civilian cooperation with the military authorities. Furthermore, it was asserted that only under martial law, administered by the United States Army, could nonessential Americans be ordered to return to the United States. Such evacuation would be for the purpose of clearing the islands and saving food supplies.

Marines Sail From Shanghai

Shanghai (Friday), Nov. 28 (INS).—Tension gripped the foreign colony in Shanghai today as residents scanned reports from Washington that Japan is about to take military action in Thailand.

But the only indication here so far that "something is up" was the fact that a press conference at the Japanese embassy slated for 5 p. m. yesterday was called off. The reason given was that Spokesman Hori, of the Japanese embassy, is leaving, and a farewell party conflicted with the time for the conference.

The first contingent of United States Marines to evacuate Chinese stations under President Roosevelt's recent order left Shanghai yesterday aboard the liner President Madison. It was announced that the remainder of the Marines would leave today aboard the liner President Harrison instead of Sunday as originally planned.

About 100 American civilians departed on the President Madison and others are expected to sail on the President Harrison.

This first Marine contingent sailed in a driving rain, which forced abandonment of plans for a parade from the International Settlement to the Bund. The trip was made in double-decked buses. At the Bund a Chinese orphanage band played "Auld Lang Syne."

Japanese distributed a story today claiming that the British were massing huge forces in Malaya for an invasion of Thailand.

The account, issued by the Domei agency, quoted a correspondent of the Tokyo newspaper Nichi Nichi as saying the British troops numbered 500,000.

Boast of Navy's Power

New York, Nov. 27 (AP).—The Tokyo radio asserted tonight that the Japanese navy is powerful enough to keep South American trade routes open for the Japanese merchant marine, even in the event of a conflict in the Pacific. The broadcast, in Portuguese and beamed to Brazil, was heard by the National Broadcasting Co.

Americans Told to Leave

Tokyo, Nov. 27 (AP).—Domei reported from Peiping today that the United States Embassy there had advised the 1,136 American citizens living in North China and Mongolia to leave immediately.

Speed Advised

Hongkong, Nov. 27 (AP).—United States citizens in Hongkong intending to return home were advised orally by American consular authorities today to make the quickest possible arrangements because of decreasing transport facilities.

Consul General Addison E. Southard, however, expressed hope that the advice would not cause "jitters" among the 400 American residents here, most of whom are remaining.

U. S., Tokyo Near Breaking Point

Nomura called at the White House.

The Japanese diplomats, leaving Mr. Roosevelt's office after a 45-minute conference, said they had "a very friendly conversation."

In well-informed quarters, however, it was stated that the President invited the Japanese envoys to the White House to underline the statement of America's position handed them Wednesday night by Secretary Hull.

This position, it was reemphasized here yesterday, does not permit the United States to sanction Japanese conquests in China and Indo-China and requires a complete break between Japan and the Axis as a prerequisite to any agreement with this country.

While officials were not yet prepared to write off the Hull-Kurusu negotiations as a faliure, it was plain last night that the initiative for a renewal of conversations must come from Tokyo.

The prospects of a Japanese reply to Hull's statement which would offer any basis for negotiations were not considered promising, in the light of a disclosure here that Kurusu and Nomura, in their six conferences with Hull, have not disavowed or attempted to tone down any of the statements on foreign policy made by their premier and foreign minister at recent sessions of the Japanese Diet.

These statements reaffirmed Japan's adherence to the Axis, emphasized her determination to finish the war in China without "interference" by other nations and demanded an end of economic reprisals against Japan by America, Britain and the Dutch East Indies.

Kurusu, facing a battery of reporters and photographers when he left the White House yesterday, was asked if the conference concluded his negotiations in Washington.

"For today," he replied.

According to the information which reached Washington yesterday, Japanese troops, artillery and tanks have been poured into Indo-China in the last week and are moving toward bases from which they could launch an attack on Thailand and threaten the Burma Road, free China's lifeline to the outer world.

The President's Day

By International News Service

SO SORRY, THANK YOU: A crammed hectic day with every minute accounted for led up to the probably final conference with the Japanese. Tall, white-haired Secretary Hull led in Ambassador Nomura and Special Envoy Kurusu. For 45 minutes the two-way confab droned cautiously on. Nomura and Kurusu came out in step, Hull stayed on for a little post-conference talk with the President. Inscrutable, polite, the Japanese envoys bowed off all questions with "So sorry, thank you," slipped out into a waiting limousine. Hull, silent and grim, replied briefly to the question of whether there would be any more conferences: "I have no engagements."

CROSS TIES: The troubled, sharp-angled day of decision for the President began with a cross-tie conference with the railroad emergency board reconvened at the President's request to gnaw further on the tight knot of the transportation strike threat. Headed by Dr. Wayne Lyman Morse, the six-man board sat at Mr. Roosevelt's deskside for well over an hour. They announced the program would proceed as scheduled with conferences tomorrow and Saturday.

AT LONG LAST: Secretary of Agriculture Wickard finally made the grade yesterday, got the President's ear after a series of cancellations. Patient, worried Wickard waited an hour, smiled happily when at last his friend, Mr. Roosevelt, could get him in for a short talk.

REPORT FROM REDLAND: Laurence Steinhardt, U. S. Ambassador to Moscow, came 16,000 miles to report to the boss, could only get started in the 45 minutes allotted him, will return as soon as the President gets back from Warm Springs, Ga.

OFFICIAL NOMINATOR: Poughkeepsie Lawyer John Mack, long-time friend and twice nominator of Mr. Roosevelt, sympathetically took little of the President's time, settled for a handshake, smile and howareya. Lunch was again a business deal, as Wayne Coy, OEM director, and Congressman Fritz Lanham shared the hour.

SPABARON: In briefly for the first time in many days, came Spabaron Donald Nelson for a check-over of defense production problems.

GUNNER: Following closely on the heels of West Virginia Gov. M. M. Neely came handsome steady-eyed Admiral Ernest J. King, commander in chief of the Atlantic Fleet. The man behind the gun that now shoots on sight in the Atlantic and the man behind the world's largest guns had much to discuss, all of it secret.

SMALL POLITICS: The President has little time for politics these days but National Democratic Chairman Ed Flynn managed to grab off a few minutes. Emphatically yes, Flynn will keep his seat as national chairman.

ADDENDA: Immediately after dinner Mr. Roosevelt went to his desk in the Oval Room study, stayed there until late.

Japanese Hint Negotiations With U.S. to Be Ended

By International News Service

Tokyo (Friday), Nov. 28.—Hinting that negotiations in Washington may be broken off, the official Japanese news agency today said "there is pessimism in reliable quarters that Japanese-American difficulties can fundamentally be bridged."

The Domei agency said:

"It is felt that there is little room for further prolongation of the Washington conversations.

"There is little hope of any change in America's attitude.

"Fate of the talks boils down to whether common points can be reached between Japan's principles and the American memorandum handed over (by Secretary of State Hull) yesterday."

Peiping, Tientsin and Hongkong American consulates followed the lead of the Shanghai office and told United States citizens it would be advisable for them to leave the Far East as soon as possible. Domei reported that 1133 Americans in North China and Inner Mongolia soon will depart via Shanghai.

Army Has 2500 Planes, Arnold Says

By John G. Norris
Post Staff Writer

Heretofore unannounced data as to the strength of the Army Air Force and the performance of American planes, disclosing that the Army now has more than 2500 combat planes in service, was officially disclosed yesterday.

The data was contained in an address made at West Point last month by Maj. Gen. Henry H. Arnold, deputy chief of staff for air, before a group of officers and cadets. It has just been released for publication, with the elimination of certain material.

In the address, General Arnold disclosed that:

"In spite of heavy diversion of planes abroad," the Army last month had 2500 combat planes, compared to 1000 at the beginning of the emergency. While few planes then were modern craft, we are now procuring in "ever-increasing quantity" the "best fighting airplanes in existence."

About 800 combat planes were a the Army's overseas bases last month, compared to but a "handful" when the emergency started.

The ceiling of the Boeing B-17 "flying fortress" has been increased from 25,000 to 34,000 feet, which has enabled the R. A. F. to make day and night raids over Germany "with virtual immunity from enemy fighters and ground fire."

America's other four-engined bomber, the Consolidated B-24 is so maneuverable in spite of its size that the R. A. F. Coastal Command has stuck four cannon in the nose, equipped it with anti-submarine devices and depth charges and uses it as a fighter.

The air force strength last month was nearly 17,000 officers, 180,000 men, and 10,000 flying cadets. It will reach an overall strength of 41,000 officers and 600,000 men, including auxiliary personnel from other branches of the Army, when the present expansion is complete.

Outlining the progress made in building air bases, General Arnold said that besides major bases in use at Anchorage and Fairbanks, others are being built at Metlakatia, Yakutat and Nome, and the C. A. A. is building ten fields at sites chosen by the Army in the Aleutian Islands.

The Air Corps Ferrying Command, established to fly new planes from American aircraft factories to hop-off points for Britain and the Middle East, "is capable of operating around the world," Arnold stated. He added that the Ferrying Command's navigators "study globes—not maps—and they would take a bomber to Tibet or Little America if you gave them 48 hours' notice."

The Air Force chief said that at the Army experimental station at Wright Field, engines with more than 2000 horsepower are undergoing tests, while even more powerful motors are being designed. Such engines probably will require eight-bladed or counter-rotating propellers, he stated, as pursuit planes cannot use the 30 foot blades that otherwise would be necessary.

Discussing pursuit planes, General Arnold said that the single-engine Bell P-39 "has demonstrated it is a match for the Spitfire and Messerschmitt up to 16,000 feet." Eclipsing the Bell and the Lockheed P-38—both being turned out in large numbers—is the new single-engined Republic P-47B, he said.

Praising also the Douglas A-20 attack bomber and Martin B-26 medium bomber as outstanding craft that are "rolling off the assembly lines in shoals," Gen. Arnold said that under development are types that will make all current planes obsolete.

General Arnold outlined some of the lessons military aviation has learned from the war to date. Among them were the following:

The single-engine fighter, with its superior maneuverability, appears to hold the edge over other fighter types. It holds daylight supremacy over bombers, but before long must push its ceiling above 40,000, or perhaps even 50,000 feet, to maintain it.

Fighters can prevent the loss of a war, but heavy bombers are required to win it.

Dive-bombers "can achieve devastating results" but must expect to suffer heavy losses. Our A-24 dive-bombers "will outperform those of any foreign nation."

Military pilots need not be officers. Eventually 20 per cent of the Army's pilots will be enlisted men.

An aircraft warning net is indispensable.

Land and sea operations cannot succeed when the enemy has control of the air. To gain control of the air, the enemy's planes must be destroyed in the air or in the factory, rather than by bombing their airdromes as was previously believed.

Air units needed for direct and intimate functioning with Army and Navy forces should be under the command of those forces.

Germans Claim Capture of Klin

R.A.F., Nazis Trade Bombs; 4 Ships Sunk

By the Associated Press

London, Nov. 27.—Heavy bombs were dropped in one district of East Anglia tonight, killing and wounding inhabitants.

A hit-and-run raider wrecked two houses on the southeast coast.

[Meanwhile 13 German radio stations went off the air suddenly tonight, the United Press listening post in New York reported.

[D. N. B., official German news agency, said British planes raided northwest Germany on Thursday night.]

The R. A. F.'s daylight sweeps of the English Channel and the North Sea netted destruction of four German ships—two supply vessels and a pair of antiaircraft boats—the air ministry announced.

One of the supply ships was hit by low-level bombardment and left sinking off The Hague, the communique said, and the others were picked out of a convoy off France's Norman coast.

Two German fighting planes were shot down into the Channel, the air ministry said.

14 Other Towns Take Behind Red Lines Near Tula, Nazis Say

By the United Press

Berlin, Nov. 27.—German panzer armies slashing into both Mowcow flanks have captured Klin, 51 miles to the northwest, and 14 towns "lying to the rear of the Soviet lines and fortifications" in the Tula area anchoring the capital's southern defenses, Nazi sources claimed tonight.

An authorized military spokesman said Klin, on the Leningrad Railway, half way to Kalinin, had been in German hands since November 9. The high command announced Monday that the Germans had wedged into the Soviet lines below Klin and taken Solnechnogorsk, only 31 miles from Moscow.

Armored divisions paced by tanks broke through the Red army defense system Wednesday and fanned out through a large pocket back of Russian lines, the D. N. B. news agency reported.

Though the location of the breach was left vague, observers said it was in the region of Stalinogorsk, southeast of Tula.

The D. N. B. dispatch admitted that the Russians had put up stout resistance in well-laid field positions and counterattacked repeatedly with tank reinforcements.

"In a battle of tank against tank, the Bolsheviks were thrown back," D. N. B. said.

The military spokesman said that Tikhvin, on the northern front, 125 miles east of Leningrad had been in German hands for some time.

The meager communique claimed that north of Rostov-on-Don, Red Army attacks were repulsed with heavy casualties. The high command reported the capture of Rostov several days ago but has had little to say of operations in that area since then.

D. N. B. said fleets of German bombers and fighters were strongly supporting the land operations in the central sector, bombarding supply and rail lines around Moscow.

In 24 hours, the agency claimed, the bombers destroyed 300 vehicles in the south and central sectors.

Finns Repelled, Reds Say

Moscow, Nov. 27 (AP).—The Moscow radio tonight quoted a Red Star correspondent on the Finnish front as reporting that furious Finnish attacks had been repulsed south and west of Medvezhegorsk, and that Soviet forces were advancing in the Kestenga area, inflicting heavy losses on Germans and Finns.

Medvezhegorsk is on the Leningrad-Murmansk Railway at the northwest tip of Lake Onega. Kestenga, farther north, is 35 miles east of the old Finnish border and 210 miles south of Murmansk.

Nazis Still Gain Around Moscow

portant gain in that sector in 11 days, soon formed for a second thrust designed to break Volokolamsk's southern defenses.

The spokesman admitted that but for a heavy snowstorm the German plan might have succeeded. As it was, he continued, the Russians were able to reform and, taking advantage of every inch of cover available in a "masterly" flanking attack, succeeded in turning the enemy's spearhead and by a stroke of good fortune were able to "neutralize" the losses suffered up to noon.

Further to the east, in the neighborhood of Klin, several early attempts by the Germans to piece the "second line" of the Moscow girdle in a southerly direction having failed completely—though the Russian spokesman admitted that Soviet losses had been "fairly heavy." The German motorized columns suddenly turned in an easterly direction and pushed along the Sestra River to its junction with the Juchvoma River north of Pogaceva, some 14 miles to the east of Klin.

Though eventually driven back to a point about half way from their starting point, this move by the Germans was considered by the military spokesman to have constituted "the gravest threat" yet on the entire central front. Its principal service to the Russians today he said, was to demonstrate conclusively the real German aim: a pincers encirclement of the entire capital region, which, failing to fall by frontal attack, would then be forced to do so by attrition.

Additional proof of this thesis, he said, was forthcoming from operations on the Stalinogorsk sector, where all German efforts throughout yesterday's fighting were directed at moving eastward along a fairly well defined path.

Fierce fighting by Col. Gen. Heinz Guderian's tank corps enabled the Germans by sheer weight of numbers to push a spearhead through the defenses of the town of Gremjaceje, it appears, and the spokesman admitted that all attempts by the Russians to break up the German columns had so far failed. The spearhead, however, was under almost continuous bombardment and its advance had been halted.

Direct frontal attacks, of which there were several against the central-western sector, between Mozhaisk and Maloyaroslavets, and against Russian positions on the Jakovievsk heights, were characterized as "diversionary" movements, aimed at drawing off further Russian forces on the northern and central sectors.

During one of these attacks in the immediate neighborhood of Mozhaisk, according to the Russian commentator, the Soviets netted their only major gain of the day.

Italians Claim Recapture of Egyptian Town

By the Associated Press

Rome, Nov. 27.—An Axis armored column plunging eastward in a desert counteroffensive has recaptured Sidi Omar on the Egyptian frontier, the Italian high command announced today.

While the Italian Sovana division was breaking up British tank attacks to the north, a communique said, the German-Italian column swept into the Sidi Omar position, which consists of two towns, "Vecchi" and "Nuovo" (Old and New) 3 miles apart, lying about 30 miles south of Bardia by caravan trail. Officers said the two towns actually form one city.

British Admit Diversion Drive

(The British have acknowledged penetration of Egypt by an Axis tank column in the Sidi Omar vicinity, and said it was intended as a diversion from the main battle south of Tobruk. Thursday this column, the British said, had been broken up into a number of separate units which were being hunted down on both sides of the frontier.)

The desert in this sector is a bleak and monotonous plateau, largely uninhabited save for military garrisons.

The Italian high command insisted it still held Bardia, despite British claims to having recaptured it, and said British prisoners were flowing into the town. The same communique said British attempts to get out of the Tobruk fortress were "repelled."

"Sustained Strong Clashes"

Of the main theater of battle around Rezegh, South of Tobruk, the high command said the Ariete Italian division had "sustained strong clashes" with British motorized and infantry units and that in other combats, German-Italian counterattacks inflicted "further heavy losses" on the British.

The British fleet shelled the coast west of Tobruk "without result," it was stated.

Terse German dispatches from the African Front said the fighting was of undiminished intensity. There were no details.

Odlum Back At Desk After Infected Tooth

FLOYD B. ODLUM.

Recovered from the effects of an infected tooth, Floyd B. Odlum, head of OPM's contract distribution division, yesterday was back at his desk and was striving to put the finishing touches on plans to gear thousands of America's smaller industries into the defense effort.

The financier, called on September 5, to head the division which took the role of rallying the Nation's entire industrial strength, has in the last few days been gathering additional data and finding cooperation among the thousands of plants having manufacturing facilities usable by the Government, it was said.

Son of a Methodist minister, Odlum worked his way through the University of Colorado Law School, worked as an attorney for the Utah Power & Light Co., and subsequently went to New York City. Later he became active in the stock market.

The officials of OPM looked around for some six weeks for a successful, two-fisted executive before deciding on Odlum as the man best suited to pull all of the Nation's industrial strings together for the defense effort.

Sidelights on the War

Gull Nearly 'Finishes Off' R. A. F. Eagle Pilot

London, Nov. 27 (AP).—A seagull came close to ending the fighting career of an American pilot flying against the Germans—that and a storm of bullets which somersaulted and shattered his plane.

Sergt. Pilot John J. Mooney, of East Hempstead, Long Island, an Eagle Squadron fighter, told his own story today of near escapes on an offensive patrol along the Netherlands coast:

"I was flying low over some fighting boats near the Dutch coast when I flew among some seagulls and saw one go apparently through my propeller.

"Later, when I attacked gun posts, an engine cut out and gave off black smoke every time I put the nose down. I couldn't figure it out until I got back and found a gull—or rather feathers, for that was all that was left of it—jammed in my air intake.

"During the attack, the plane was blown over on its back by ack-ack (antiaircraft fire), the radio was smashed and the craft was riddled. I got back by skimming the waves all the way."

Mooney's Spitfire was hit by three cannon shells and some 30 machine-gun bullets.

Do Not Disturb

New York, Nov. 27 (U.P.).—The London radio broadcast tonight that "while Germans are advancing slowly but steadily toward Moscow, a chess tournament was started today in the Soviet capital."

Gamelin Slightly Worse

Vichy, Nov. 27 (AP).—The condition of Gen. Maurice Gustave Gamelin, former generalissimo of the French and British armies, was reported "slightly worse" today at a clinic at Ororon, south of Pau.

Gamelin was removed early this month from Pontarlet Fortress, where he had been interned with Edouard Daladier and Paul Reynaud, former French premiers. He is suffering from erysipelas complicated by nervous disorders.

New Goebbels Blast

Berlin, Nov. 27 (AP).—Pursuing his sharp anti-American campaign, Propaganda Minister Paul Joseph Goebbels wrote in a special article for the weekly Das Reich, published today, that "we do not underestimate the United Sttaes, but we do not overestimate them either.

"If Roosevelt should take over the war, then he would not be runnnig behind the war any more, but the war behind him—a situation decidedly more unpleasant for him. For htat reason we are looking forward to his further intrigues with stoic calm. Also, in this case nothing is eaten as hot as it is cooked."

Americans Taken

London, Nov. 27 (AP).—The German radio announced tonight that R. A. F. prisoners of war in Germany included "Pilot Officer Donald Arthur Webster, of Florida, U. S. A., and Sergt. Bert Martin, U. S. A."

The men are not listed here as members of the R. A. F.'s American Eagle Squadron, but may have been in another branch of the R. A. F.

Vichy Reopens Prisons

Vichy, Nov. 27 (AP).—Three additional old French prisons were ordered reopened today to accommodate France's growing prison popuation.

Seven hade been previousy reopened following disclosure by Justice Minister Joseph Barthelemy that the number of persons in jail had reached the record-breaking figure of 34,000.

Another decree established a 48-hour week for all State Railway employes who had been working under the old 40-hour week.

Tobruk Garrison, Relief Column Form Juncture

reported rushing up reinforcements in men, tanks and planes from the west in an effort to crush the Tobruk-Rezegh link.

Rezegh itself has become a tank-littered graveyard, the spokesman said, adding that casualties have been heavy on both sides, and the end is far away.

"Our objective still is to wipe out the Axis tank units in Libya," he pointed out, "but it will take a lot more hard fighting."

The spectacular meeting between the men of Tobruk and the New Zealanders climaxed two dramatic stories.

Tobruk has held out since mid-April. Most of its defenders were Australians who successfully resisted hte formidable siege efforts of the German Libyan commander, Gen. Erwin Rommel. Many of these Australians were removed from Tobruk before the Libyan invasion began. Poles and Indian troops with tanks replaced them, and presumably these troops were among those who fought their way as far as Ed Duda.

The New Zealanders made a 125-mile g-zag dash across the desert to meet them. Thrusting across the border near Sidi Omar they cut northward to claim the capture of Bardia at the rear of the Axis border lines. Next they took Gambut to the west and sped on toward Tobruk along the coast.

When other British imperial units ran into the savage fight at Rezegh this New Zealand column darted southward to their aid.

When the British again retook that battlefield, the New Zealanders pressed on northward to join the men of Tobruk.

British Face New Threat

saw a German threat to Britain's saw a Germa nthreat to Britain's communication lines at Sidi Omar near the Egyptian border where small units of Axis tanks, originally part of a raiding column, still were roving.

A communique said the British already had smashed five German tanks and 80 vehicles in these "nuisance" raids, and had taken 300 prisoners, mostly German, but acknowledged that the fighting was planned to speed to Rezegh to combat this thrust.

The more serious threat, however, was far to the west behind Rezegh and Tobruk where Axis reinforcements were hurrying forward.

The R. A. F., equipped with American Curtiss fighters and Martin bombers, rained tons of bombs on these marching columns of men and supply trucks.

Gasoline and ammunition trucks were reported hit, and the R. A. F. also claimed the destruction of ten Axis planes over Rezegh Tuesday with a loss of only two British planes. Axis docks at Bengasi also were attacked.

The British were silent today about another of their columns, reported to have driven more than 200 miles across the desert far to the south of the present fighting in an obvious attempt to sever Axis communications with Tripoli.

This Indian group last was reported at Aguila, about 150 miles from the Gulf of Sirte, below Bengasi.

The British said they still were using light U. S. tanks in the desert against the heavier 22-ton German tanks.

Churchill Gets New Vote of Confidence

By the Associated Press

London, Nov. 27.—The British House of Commons gave Winston Churchill another towering vote of confidence in himself, his government and his war methods today after hearing the bitter charge from John (Jock) McGovern, long a one-man parliamentary tornado, that "America is prepared to use British bodies to blast her way into the markets of the Continent."

By the vote, 326 to 2, the government beat down an attack by the unregenerate Independent Labor Party, a four-man group of extreme left-wingers, to amend the traditional House reply to the recent speech from the Throne by inserting a note of regret that the speech contained no definite proposals for changing the present economic system. The party wants a "Socialist Charter" for after the war.

McGovern, however, carried the debate far afield, charging among other things that the Churchill-Roosevelt Atlantic Charter was "one of the grossest pieces of deceit of modern times" and that the United States, by pursuing its present policy, wants to "reestablish the old financial system of Wall Street" in Europe—"They are no more concerned with freedom and democracy than are a large number of reactionary Fascists in this country."

Churchill himself stayed away from the debate, but his foreign secretary, Anthony Eden, rebuked the fiery Scot for declaring that "when this is all over the United States will hold us in financial bondage."

"That," Eden said, "is not true. Under the lend-lease arrangement there is no accounting and no debt piling up."

Later an authoritative source explained this statement as meant to contrast the lease-lend arrangement with the war-debt situation which was "such a sore point" after the first great war. This source said:

"Britain is of course committed to return or replace everything she receives and everyone knows this is an obligation which must and will be met. Mr. Eden sought to assure the British people that there would not be another gigantic war debt to be paid off with money they don't have and won't have and thus there won't be the recriminations that followed the last war."

Eden also made these points:

1. Declared the present anti-comintern conference in Berlin was the opening wedge for a Nazi peace offensive, but that it would not affect "one jot" the determination of Britain to carry on the war and that, "I hope, the remaining neutral countries will not be deluded into listening to Hitler's plan for a new order."

2. Denied Nazi Foreign Minister von Ribbentrop's charge that Britain received assurance in 1940 that Russia would join the war on her side. He asserted Britain was continually handicapped by Russia's adherence to her pact with Germany prior to last July and "at no time until actually German troops had crossed the frontier was there any political or military conversation between us and the Soviet government—I wish there might have been."

Hitler's Peace Motive

Declaring Hitler needed a respite because of Russian resistance, Eden said: "He is trying to persuade the nations of Europe that the only way they can get peace is by coming into his new order. He said that if they do that he would be successful in bringing the British and Americans to terms.

"He is wrong. He won't.

"The choice with which this house is confronted is as clear today as it was on the first day of the conflict . . . In all things, whether it be a socialist charter or some other form of order for the post-war world, none of our dreams can be realized until Hitler is defeated."

McGovern, who in past years has publicly called the royal family "a gang of lazy, idle parasites" and was suspended from Commons on the occasion of one such outburst, declared that if the Atlantic charter was good enough for countries conquered by Hitler, "surely we ought to guarantee the independence of our own colonial peoples."

Eden replied that the comparison between Nazi-occupied Europe and British India—was "the most extravagant absurdity." He told the Commons that if the government washed its hands of the war, as the Independent Labor critics appeared to want it to do, there would be "no socialist charter, no system in Europe but the Nazi system."

Gives Execution Figures

On one hand, Eden said there was but "a handful of white officials in India;" on the other, he enumerated these "official German figures" on executions in occupied countries:

Czecho-Slovakia, 337 from September 27 to October 29, 1941.

Yugoslavia, 1132 since Axis occupation.

France, 250 since August 13.

Zagreb, 100 shot June 23, for the death of two German soldiers.

Actually, he added, the Yugoslav killings may total 35,000.

The motion which the House adopted on the final vote expressed "complete confidence in the Prime Minister and not only in him personally but also in those people and those methods which it was the Prime Minister's right and responsibility to choose and use for the winning of the war."

McGovern and one other I. L. P. member were unable to vote against it because they were chosen as tellers.

Lend-Lease Reference Brings Explanation Here

When Foreign Secretary Eden told the British House of Commons that "under the lend-lease agreement there is no accounting," informed officials said yesterday that presumably he meant to say there was no provision for billing Britain on a strictly financial basis.

Negotiations for an agreement providing for repayment have been under way in Washington and London for weeks.

It has not been disclosed what forms of repayment have been considered, but nothing has been said in official quarters to indicate that the settlement would be a financial one.

Solomon didn't depend on his thousand wives when it came to cooking. He kept 11 stewards traveling, on the lookout for new dishes and sauces.

No matter where you travel, you can enjoy the sauce for which Solomon might well have mortgaged the crown jewels—Lea & Perrins Sauce, the original Worcestershire.

To everyday dishes it adds royal seasoning—bestows banquet flavor on soup or fish, or meat dishes. Try it tonight, and watch your husband beam across the table.

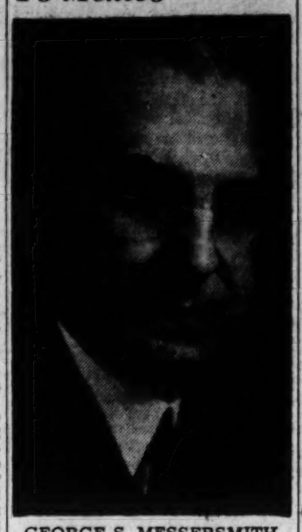
Named Envoy To Mexico



GEORGE S. MESSERSMITH.

Messersmith Nominated as Mexico Envoy

George S. Messersmith, now Ambassador to Cuba, was nominated by President Roosevelt yesterday as envoy to Mexico, where his first job will be to seek final settlement of the oil expropriation controversy under terms of the general Mexican-American agreement announced last week.

A 58-year-old career diplomat regarded as one of the State Department's leading experts on Latin America, Messersmith has held diplomatic posts at Curacao, Antwerp, Buenos Aires, Berlin, Montevideo and Vienna.

Was Envoy to Cuba

He was Assistant Secretary of State from 1937 until January of 1940, when he was appointed Ambassador to Cuba. His new appointment is expected to receive speedy confirmation from the Senate.

In Mexico City Messersmith will succeed Josephus Daniels, North Carolina publisher and Secretary of the Navy in the Wilson Administration. Daniels resigned a month ago.

Last week's agreement between Mexico and the United States, when rounded out by final settlement of the American oil companies' claims against Mexico, is expected to bring a new era of cordiality in relations between the two countries.

Seeks Closer Arms Ties

With long-standing disputes disposed of, it is believed that Messersmith will concentrate on efforts to work out closer military and naval collaboration between Mexico and this country.

Another objective of the new envoy may be the conclusion of a Mexican-American reciprocal trade agreement. Last week's agreement included a statement that the two nations had agreed "in principle" to undertake reciprocal trade negotiations.

Speculation on Messersmith's successor at Havana centered on R. Henry Norweb, another career diplomat who is now Ambassador to Peru.

Anti-Red Pact Signers Exposed To Hitler's Forceful Charm

Copyright by New York Times

Berlin, Nov. 27.—One by one most of the "little statesmen" of Europe were ushered into Reichsfuehrer Hitler's private work cabinet today and one by one they were exposed to Herr Hitler's forceful personality and to his views on the new order as it affects their respective countries.

Along with the value of the anti-Comintern convention as a "show" and a general morale builder, these personal interviews on the third and final day of the meeting are considered here to be by far the most important of the events of Berlin's "anti-Red week."

This afternoon Herr Hitler gave a luncheon for the delegates. The luncheon was served in the new Reich chancellery. One invited guest could not attend—Johann Witting, the Finnish foreign minister, who had to leave early so that he might be present at the weekly private cabinet council in Helsinki. Witting had a private talk with Herr Hitler in the morning, however, and this talk is said to have lasted more than one hour, which is considered significant in view of the recent developments in the United States-Finnish relations.

Summing up only those results of the convention which do not need the ratification of victory, neutral political observers here today say that one result worth remembering is the discovery of the phrase "Seeds of Bolshevism," insofar as it provides a pretext for any new military initiative that Germany may be prompted to take in the near or distant future.

Exterminating seeds of Bolshevism, these observers think, may lead any country with such a policy far. Old and new members of the anti-Red pact, alike, have been told already that the Bolshevik weeds are growing in the United States, with whom none of the pact members is at war, and in Britain, with whom only Germany and Italy are at war. The obligations that may eventually devolve upon a pact member are likened by observers to those or Article XVI in the League of Nations Covenant, with the significant difference that this time they will be of a "must" kind with no sanctions or token actions affording an out."

Anglo-Saxon assertions that it was a meeting of puppets and marionettes are met from the German side with the assertion that not a single one of the delegates represented unreal or imaginary forces "such as the emigre governments of London do." Every one of these delegates, it is advanced here, comes from an existing nation.

One of the most amusing stories told here in diplomatic circles as an aftermath of the convention is how Denmark almost missed becoming a member of the anti-Red Pact. According to these circles, the Danish government got the idea of joining only 48 hours before the time scheduled for the signing of the pact in Berlin. By the private parliamentary formalities required by the Danish constitution the King and cabinet and Riksdag councils had to approve the decision. Before the councils could be convened and the approvals obtained, so much time had elapsed that Foreign Minister Eric Scavenius received his power to sign only a few seconds before the Berlin train left.

'V' Is Victory To Allies, but $s to Tulsan

By the Associated Press

Tulsa, Okla., Nov. 27.—Pratho P. Scott didn't think up the V-for-Victory emblem, but he had a better idea. He got a patent on it, and now he stands to make a fortune.

The V has been widely employed, as in jewelry and clothing designs, but strangely enough nobady ever took the trouble to safeguard it with a patent.

Now it seems that all the commercial organizations utilizing the patriotic symbol of a battle-torn Britain may have to pay royalties to Scotty.

Scott, sales manager for a Tulsa boat company, got his bright idea recently when he designed a V-for-Victory boat pennant for a customer. Inside the V appeared the well-known three dots and a dash, Morse code for V.

The customer rejected the drawing but it got Scotty to thinking. He employed a patent attorney, advanced the necessary $150 patent fees, and sat back to see what would happen.

A search of the Patent Office files in Washington disclosed that there was no patent on the V and one was issued to him.

For no sooner had it been granted than a dozen firms offered to negotiate with him for exclusive rights.

London, Nov. 27 (AP).—Victor de Laveley, former head of the Belgian Liberal Party who claims to have originated the V-for-Victory emblem, commented:

"I suppose the American has only a commercial purpose. There is a slightly different ideal behind the campaign I started."

Red Army Near Collapse In Mock War

By Marshall Andrews
Post Staff Writer

With First Army in the Field.—The battle of the Carolinas roared on toward its finish tonight with Red Fourth Corps caught in an implacably closing net of Blue infantry.

So hopeless did the Red situation appear tonight that the end of the battle appeared imminent. In all probability hostilities will cease tomorrow morning and 350,000 men start the trip back to base camps, from which they will move out for home stations soon after December 1.

When night fell on the long lines of troops locked in mimic battle, the Twenty-ninth and Forty-fourth Divisions had fought themselves to a frazzle. Against these two divisions all day long the Red tanks hammered, thrusting their steel spearheads between brigades, between regiments, driving into the infantry lines and isolating small detachments which were cut down or captured.

In the face of this day-long attack, the Twenty-ninth fell back along its front one-half to 1½ miles; the Forty-fourth was likewise pushed back. There the two divisions held, containing on their fronts the attack of two armored divisions and the Fourth Motorized Division, the total of heavy striking power in the hands of Maj. Gen. O. W. Griswold, commanding Fourth Corps.

It was a costly defense. The Twenty-ninth lost half of its medium artillery, whose 155 millimeter howitzers were used point blank against tanks. One of the 110th Field Artillery's two battalions of 75 millimeter guns was knocked out; the 111th Field Artillery lost 12 of its 25 guns. The Twenty-ninth antitank battalion was all but wiped out. All day long no piece of artillery fired a shot on a normal artillery mission; every gun and every howitzer fought tanks which rolled in from all directions apparently without end.

The Twenty-ninth lost one-third of its infantry against the waves of tanks pouring in upon it. Yet its 175th Infantry managed to push ahead so far that it was ordered to halt and hold its line.

This last-ditch stand by two of his divisions enabled Lieut. Gen. Hugh A. Drum, commanding Blue First Army, to launch a movement which points to the end the battle swiftly with complete defeat of the weaker Reds. Early tonight this movement was nearly completed.

In the air, the Blue again took command after a futile attempt by Red pursuit to smash Blue airdromes. Red airfields were bombed again, grounding practically all Red bombers, while Blue attack and medium bombardment tore at the Catawba and Wateree bridges, harrassed tank and infantry columns on the roads and troops assembling for attack.

Today's fighting demonstrated again the futility of the fiercest tank attack unsupported by infantry. Time and again Red tanks got deep into Blue territory, only to turn and fight their way out again from positions they could not hold.

Again the strength of antitank defense by massed guns in depth was demonstrated. Hundreds of guns were knocked out, but not before each had accounted for its tank or two, until by the time the tanks had driven through them they were so weakened by losses as to be capable of little more than fighting out again.

So close did tanks come today to the Twenty-ninth Division command post that staff officers and division clerks were organized into antitank defenses, posted with flour-sack grenades in the woods to fight the steel monsters hand to hand. Several times tanks came within sight of the command post, only to pass it by without discovery.

Troops fighting through the dust today had a distinguished spectator whom few of them recognized. Gen. George C. Marshall, chief of staff of the Army, spent the day driving along the lines, talking with officers and men, watching them do their part in this country's smost ambitious war games. Gen. Marshall flew down from Washington yesterday, landing at Charlotte, N. C.

One-Man Tank Crew Captures Battalion

Camden, S. C., Nov. 27 (AP).—The lieutenant was seated in the 28-ton tank when Maj. Gen. George S. Patton, commander of the Second Armored Division, walked up.

"What's your position?" the general asked.

"I don't know, sir," the lieutenant answered.

"Where's your map? Can't you read?"

"Yes, sir, but I have just rounded up a battalion (about 750 men) of infantry with this tank and I haven't had time to look over the map."

"Hell, don't worry about the map," was the general's compliment.

Truman Hits Quartermaster Unit on Waste

By the Associated Press

Senator Truman (Democrat), of Missouri, chairman of the Senate Defense Investigating Committee, yesterday charged that the War Department's quartermasters' division apparently promoted officers for "waste and extravagance" instead of court martialing them.

Truman made his remarks during an inquiry into construction of the Wolf Creek shell-loading plant at Milan, Tenn. He had previously described testimony of alleged waste at the project as "shocking."

While the cost of the project was orignially estimated at 20 million dollars, the committee has received evidence that 51 million dollars already has been spent, although it still is unfinished.

Senator Mead (Democrat), of New York, remarked that the relations between Maj. Paul Brewer, former constructing quartermaster on the job, and the contractors constituted a game of "you scratch my back and I'll scratch yours."

Truman said the evidence indicated that Brewer was ineffective because after his "sisters and his cousins and his aunts were taken care of by the contractor, he came down off his pedestal and he couldn't tell them what to do, so they went ahead and did just what they pleased."

The Senatorial remarks interrupted questioning of Maj. Glenn B. Hofto, present constructing quartermaster of the Wolf Creek plant, about the activities of his predecessor, Major Brewer, and his relations with the contractors, the Ferguson-Oman Co.

Hofto said he found considerable evidence of idle equipment for which no use was being made but on which the Government was paying rent and that he put a stop to that practice.

Earlier the committee counsel, Hugh A. Fulton, produced correspondence he said he had from the Denny-Caldwell Co., Milam automobile dealers. This, he said, showed that the dealers "wrote up" the value of 61 Chevrolet trucks purchased for rental to the project. As a result of the write-up he said, the value of the trucks was set at $10,000 more than they cost.

The trucks eventually were purchased by the Government at a "recapture" value of $49,827 after $28,557 in rental had accumulated, Fulton declared, while they cost the dealer but $38,916, most of which was borrowed.

He said the company sold more than $15,000 worth of truck parts to the project, some at prices 120 per cent above Treasury schedules of what they could have been obtained for. He added that two former employes of this company had obtained jobs with the project contractor at increased salaries.

Horde of Parachute Troops Captures Maxton Airport

ized into men dangling from the chutes, the sound of high-pitched voices filled the air, sergeants calling orders, men shouting warnings and directions as they floated earthward. Like a swarm of excited swallows, talking in their own language among themselves, they settled on the airport, 150 of them, armed to the teeth.

Most of the 150 landed on the flying field. There were others not so fortunate. One chap smacked down on a barn and slid off into some surprised cow's front yard; another swept across a high-tension line within inches of sudden death. A few came down in trees bordering the airport.

It was a windless day and the men tore their chute harness from them while they still bent with the shock of landing. Free of the chutes, they rushed to the colored parachutes, ripped open the packages they bore and took out machine guns, mortars, submachine guns and raced into the woods and cornfields along the field.

From there came the sharp, quarrelsome sound of their guns, holding off surprised defenders for what was to come. It was not long in getting there.

Out of the slight haze to the southward roared three big planes in a tight V, noses down, coming in for a landing. Behind them were three more, and another three, dwindling into the distance.

Landing, these planes taxied swiftly across the field, fell in line and waddled downwind like a parade of frightened ducks. They had not halted before men streamed from them, 24 men from each plane, men armed with Garand rifles, automatic rifles, machineguns, mortars, all the utensils of a bloody trade. These men, without a single shouted order, rushed to the edge of the airport, backing up the parachute men, bringing the power of their heavy weapons into the battle.

Still the big planes settled down onto the field, waddled over and disgorged their fighting cargo. Out of one plane came a .37-millimeter antitank gun. First the trails, then the barrel, finally the carriage, rolled down two planks laid by the crew. In the cornfield the gun was put together in seconds, covered with cornstalks uprooted for camouflage, and speaking with its sharp and smoky voice.

Off in the woods the roar of battle mounted to an insistent clamor, then faded and died. Soon parachuters strolled back, grinning and lighting cigarettes, their queer helmets flapping over their ears and their baggy pants tugging at the high boots which held them in at the ankles. These fellows rolled up their chutes, tucked them into kit bags and waited while their planes, circling the field and waiting for its capture, came in and landed.

It was over in a half hour, the field was taken, its defenders driven off, the landing strips made safe for friendly planes for a little while. In that time parachuters and air-borne infantry together could have destroyed every plane on the ground, which, in this case, happened to belong to the District's 121st Observation Squadron, planted charges to wreck the runways, and got away to safety.

It was done like that in Holland and in Crete; it will be done like that again.

Today's show, staged especially for news photographers, was the work of part of the 502nd Parachute Battalion, of Fort Benning, Ga., and part of the Ninth Infantry, Fort Sam Houston, Tex.

They're Really Tough, These Tankers

Camden, S. C., Nov. 27 (AP).—These tankers are tough.

Four of them in one of the 13-ton (light) tanks of the Second Armored Division were charging through a wood in the Carolina war games.

The driver didn't see the drop off. Over the side the tank dropped, rolled over and over for 55 feet and landed right side up. The crew climbed out of the undamaged battlewagon and nonchalantly cooked themselves a meal while waiting a tow out of the hole.

A few hours later they were in the "battle" again.

D. C. Defense Hurt by Lack Of Materials

At what point does the absence of bombs cease to be a pleasure and become a "definite shortage?"

When there are not enough in town for defense instructors to show their pupils what they're talking about, it seems—and in Washington that point has been reached.

"Yes, I'd say there is a shortage of bombs, gas masks and sniffer sets needed for classes," Col. Lemuel Bolles, director of the District Defense Council, said yesterday. "Also, there's a shortage of printed material for use as textbooks."

With air raid wardens, fire and police auxiliaries and a dozen rescue squads ready to be trained, the District has on hand "maybe a dozen" sets of equipment.

The first class of deputy air raid wardens and assistants in Washington will be "graduated" tonight at 635 North Carolina Avenue Southeast, where firemen trained at Edgewood Arsenal have been instructors. The class is made up of 34 wardens, whose places will be taken at the school Monday night by another group of the same size.

Almost as glaring as the lack of training equipment and textbooks is the shortage of trained instructors. Small units of firemen and policemen have been and are being trained in protective defense technique—but not enough yet.

C. Melvin Sharpe, chief of utilities in the defense set-up, said yesterday his organization is as complete as it can be made until "we get certain things straightened out with the Federal authorities as to where local control ends and Federal begins."

measures and reprisals, has resulted thus far, reliable sources said, in the comparative cleaning up of about half of western Serbia from the Sava River southward. The Serbian guerrillas have been driven back into the mountains.

Italians Claim Victory Over Serbs

By the Associated Press

Zagreb, Croatia, Nov. 27.—Dispatches reaching here today from Bosnia said Italian troops had fought their way to the village of Visegrad, on the Drina River, which had been besieged by Serb rebels for seven months.

Three battalions of secret police troops were said to have fought off the steady rebel attacks with the help of the town's 2500 population. Visegrad was one of the point from which Austrians opened their offensive against Serbia in the World War.

As reports of new rebel activity were received here Zagreb authorities issued a decree authorizing the secret police to put all persons "who appear to be dangerous" to the public security into concentration camps for one to three years.

Continued heavy fighting between German-directed Serb government forces and insurgents, with casualties in single engagements running as high as 1000, was reported today by the Belgrade press.

Dispatches said 150 rebels were killed, 600 wounded and 300 taken prisoner at Rudnik, 50 miles south of Belgrade, on Tuesday. The town of Kikevo, southeast of Belgrade, which has been in rebel hands for months, was reported taken in a two-hour fight.

Eight Bad Checks Bring Year in Jail

Police Court Judge George D. Neilson yesterday sentenced John R. Brohawn, 34, no fixed address, to one year in jail on eight charges of passing bad checks. Brohawn pleaded guilty.

It was testified he had passed checks in amounts between $15 and $30. He was sentenced to serve 45 days on each charge.

Honeymoon Ends

Reynolds, Wife Get Flu In Havana

Senator Robert Rice Reynolds, of North Carolina, was back in town yesterday, a witness to the fact that even on his fifth honeymoon a man may have his bad luck.

A honeymoon is no time for the two leading members of the cast to come down with influenza, but that is exactly what happened to the Senator and his 20-year-old heiress bride, the former Evalyn McLean, Reynolds said.

They contracted it in, of all places, sunny Havana.

The 57-year-old Senator was being genial and looking tanned yesterday. He is up and around. Mrs. Reynolds, while recovering, is confined to bed, he said.

"Rest," the Senator philosophized, "is still the best treatment for influenza."

Those Havana influenza germs also cut into the Senator's defense inspection, it came out. Because of the influenza, he had to eliminate his intended visit to Army maneuvers.

During the seven-week honeymoon, however, Reynolds, chairman of the Senate Military Affairs Committee, did manage to get in some inspection, including a look at Florida projects and a visit to the "defense highway" in Cuba.

Color Movie to Show Idyllic Tahiti Life

Tahiti will be presented in color motion pictures to members of the National Geographic Society at Constitution Hall, tonight, by Earl Schenck, who spent 14 years in this remote French colony, studying the idyllic life of the natives and making miniature sculptures. Colorful fish of the coral reefs will be shown, including waving anemones and sea fans, sharks, conger-eels and octopuses.

Italy to Free U. S. Captives

Copyright by New York Times

Rome, Nov. 27.—The disposition of the two military observers and the American war correspondents captured by the Italian forces in Libya was being studied in Rome today, but it has already been made clear that they will be treated as noncombatants.

Some days are expected to pass before any decision is taken. The Rome authorities state that they have not even received the names of the prisoners yet, and none of the newspapermen, at least, will be set free until an investigation is made of each case separately.

Col. Norman Fiske, American military attache in Rome, made inquiries at the war ministry this afternoon and was told that as soon as any information was received he would be advised.

Newspaper comment on the case is far from friendly today, particularly as this is the first time that commentators have been permitted to express what they think about American aid to the British in this campaign.

other two-thirds are reported to belong to Charles S. Payson, New York capitalist, who has taken no direct part in the publishing activity.

Moved From New York

Scribner's moved its offices here from New York several months ago—shortly after it is declared that some person—name and motives unknown, or unrevealed, anyway—gave Stewart the package of money.

Scribner's set up offices in a trim, white two-story building on Lake Geneva's main street, fed its mailing list a consignment of several thousand franked speeches and otherwise initiated operations.

With Scribner's well under way in its new base, a new company was formed, Lake Geneva Publications, Inc. The president was Charles G. Lind, Scribner's office manager; the vice president was B. F. Anderson, and the treasurer, R. S. Cour. For a time the Herald maintained separate offices at the Luzern Hotel, but later joined its sister publication in the little white house on Main Street

The first issue appeared August 5, and its tone was set by an article on page 1 which proclaimed "Europe Masses to Fight Russian Communists." Seventeen nations join the German Reich in holy crusade against U. S. S. R." There was a cartoon lampooning Roosevelt and a violently anti-interventionist editorial.

The August 12 issue declared that priorities had forced many American industries to close their plants, while "business as usual" remained the slogan in Britain, where, the Herald said, the shops sold peacetime goods which soon would be denied Americans because of the "war mongers."

Comes That Man Again

The man with the package of money—or somebody even more generous—must have liked the Herald. For on a clear, sultry afternoon in mid-August—that's how the story goes, a package wrapped in brown paper turned up in the Stewart home. And inside were sheaves and sheaves of crisp $20 bills, $15,000 of them.

Like the previous issues, the August 12 Herald carried an advertisement for Scribner's, there was also an ad for the America First Committee and one for a Chicago group which called itself the Citizens Keep America Out of War Committee.

The Herald also advertised Representative Stephen A. Day's anti-interventionist book "We Must Save the Republic," first issued by Flanders Hall, Inc., publishers of anti-British books for George Sylvester Viereck, indicted German propagandist, but offered in the Herald by the Shaw Publishing Co. of Washington.

A regular feature of the Herald was a Congressional digest, which summarized in several columns the speeches of the wek of such anti-interventionist orators as Representative Hamilton Fish, Senator Wheeler, Representative Clare Hoffman and Senator Hiram Johnson.

Fred Kister, radio editor of Scribner's Commentator, contributed a little feature entitled "My Day, by Joseph Stalin," which represented the Soviet dictator as chuckling over the way he was bamboozling the American bourgeoisie. Kister also edited the Herald's weekly summary of official war communiques, presenting those of the Axis and Allies side by side, with an "analysis" beneath them. In the analysis Kister managed each week to conclude that by and large the Nazi communiques were truthful and the Allied false.

The Money Rolls In

These features apparently also were pleasing to the modest man with money, because—so the story goes—about the middle of September there were more $20 bills out of nowhere.

This time they were tossed through the window one night. Another $15,000.

The Herald continued with its advertisements, featuring for itself a combined subscription offer with Scribner's Commentator. The Stalin-Kister "My Day," adorned with a bristling picture of the Russian chief, won the hearts of readers. Their letters, published in the Herald, said so.

But the middle of October came, and went, with no further shower of $20 bills. Santa Claus apparently had gone out of business. So a couple of weeks ago the Herald did too. Publication, as the staff, now working only for Scribner's puts it, has been suspended indefinitely. Publication in Lake Geneva anyway.

Observers suggested that possibly another Herald has been started up somewhere else.

One of those who appeared in the Herald venture, ostensibly as a staff writer, was Ralph Townsend, now the object of a Nation-wide search by Federal agents.

Three weeks ago, Bessie Feagin, Scribner's promotion manager, told the special grand jury that, by Eggleston's order, a copy of the mailing list was given to Townsend. He was summoned to testify, but the order was not served. Washington attorneys for Scribner's then said they would produce him last Monday, but he failed to show up. After inquiry, the lawyers said he has no connection with Scribner's, but worked exclusively for the Herald, with which the Washington lawyers had nothing to do.

A search here showed that Townsend left about two weeks ago.

Also missing now is Miss Feagin, whose recall by the special grand jury has been rumored in Washington. She is reported to have suffered a collapse after her four days before the grand jury, in which it took a threat of jail for contempt of court to cure her "bad memory" about the propaganda base here.

Nazi Probers To Hear Editor And Publisher

Two top executives of the magazine, Scribner's Commentator, who have been accused of trying to obstruct the special grand jury investigation of German agents, are scheduled to appear before the grand jurors today, Special Prosecutor William P. Maloney disclosed last night.

Douglas M. Stewart and George T. Eggleston, respectively publisher and editor of the New York periodical, were subpenaed earlier in the month after one of their employes told the grand jury that the pair had come here and talked to her about her testimony while she was a witness.

Also testifying this morning will be a new witness, Seward Collins, 42-year-old former Manhattan editor, concerning whom Maloney would give out no information.

Collins, husband of Authoress Dorothea Brande, is a wealthy former editor and publisher of several national magazines and is reported now to operate a bookstore in New York City.

No clew was given as to the testimony he is expected to give the grand jury, though it was indicated that he might be asked to shed new light on mailing list activities and propaganda distribution channels, currently being probed by the investigators.

Eggleston and Stewart will very likely be asked to remain here for further questioning after today's session, Maloney said.

Their magazine came under the scrutiny of the grand jury in connection with charges that it possesses a secret anti-interventionist "master mailing list." Bessie Feagin, attractive Scribner's sales and promotion manager, testified relative to this earlier, and later admitted that her employers had talked with her about testimony she had given.

Meanwhile, no indication of when Representative Hamilton Fish, who left two weeks ago for duty with the First Army in North Carolina, would return to testify before the grand jury was available.

The isolationist spokesman left for duty shortly after the House had declared him free to answer a subpena issued for him by the panel. His office said yesterday that they had received no word as to when he would return, though the two weeks of active duty required of him as a reserve colonel are up this weekend. Maloney has asserted that he will ask Fish to appear as soon as he returns to Washington.

Army Boosts Antidote For Panzers

By International News Service

Secretary of War Stimson, asserting the United States Army has found the antidote for panzer warfare, yesterday revealed radical improvements are being incorporated in American tanks following their baptism of fire in real and mock warfare.

The War Department plans for tanks and future fighting units include:

1. Switch from rivets to welding, an exclusive process developed in this country, in fabricating the hard-hitting monsters.
2. Formation of a tank-destroyer unit, the first of its kind anywhere in the world.
3. Incorporation of a second motorized infantry division.
4. Mass production of M-3, or medium tanks, with .75-mm. cannon in a swivel turret to permit firing at any angle.

Stimson said that production of welded tanks is already underway. He added the decision to switch over from riveting was made some time ago as Army officials found flaws in the earlier method of attaching armor plate.

Although the Secretary did not disclose the type welding being used, it was presumed the behemoths were being put together by the "shot-weld" method. Much faster than the old-type riveting, "shot-welding" has been used extensively in turning out streamlined trains and ships.

One criticism of riveted tanks is that the metal slugs are easily dislodged by machine-gun bullets as small as .50-caliber, and spin around inside the vehicle to the detriment of the operators.

At the same time, Stimson revealed that according to information so far, American-made tanks and other armored equipment are standing up very well in the Battle of Libya. In launching the new drive, British forces swept over the Egyptian border with United States tanks to the fore.

Biggest improvement in "medium" tanks, according to the War Department, is the placing of its .75-mm. cannon in a swivel turret at the top. Early models carried the semi-automatic French 75 on the right, limiting its range to a 90-degree arc. With the new arrangement, the gun can be fired in any direction without changing the course of the tank.

Suspect in Miley Killing Hedges On 'Confession'

Lexington, Ky., Nov. 27 (AP).—Asserting he had been "mentally incapacitated" during the past six months and "does not now remember all the contents" of a statement given police, one of three men charged with the Miley clayings today asked for a court order permitting his attorney to inspect the document.

The request was filed in behalf of Raymond S. (Skeeter) Baxter, 27, a greens tender at the Lexington Country Club, when Golf Star Marion Miley and her mother were killed in their club apartment, September 28.

Although Baxter's statement never was made public, Police Chief A. B. Price said Baxter admitted in it that he plotted with Tom C. Penney, 32, and Robert H. Anderson, 36, to rob the Mileys.

The three men are to go on trial here December 8 on murder charges.

U. S. to Bolster Arms Delivery In Middle East

By the Associated Press

The Lend-Lease Administration was reported yesterday to be "in process of arranging" for extensive construction of warehouses, docks, railway sidings and airplane landing facilities in the Red Sea area.

R. L. MAXWELL

The work is going forward, officials said, under immediate direction of a United States military mission to the Middle East headed by Brig. Gen. Russell L. Maxwell, whose principal job is to expediate the delivery of munitions to British forces in the Near East.

Another military mission assigned to the task of expediting shipments to Russia through Iraq and Iran was reported undertaking extensive improvements in terminal facilities at Basra, Iraq, and Bandarshah, Iran.

The Red Sea area is a terminal section for American sea shipments to the British force now engaged in a great campaign to drive the Axis out of Libya.

Ships loaded with war supplies have been going there for several months, but apparently the necessity of considerably enlarging the movement of supplies has led to the decision to install the warehouses, docks and other facilities.

The Iraq-Iran mission, under the leadership of Brig. Gen. Raymond A. Wheeler, has the difficult task of building up and extending available railway systems in the two countries through which munitions are flowing to Russian forces.

Masonic Rites for Slain Attorney at Leesburg

SLAIN ATTORNEY LAID TO REST—Ward Loveless was buried yesterday in the Union Cemetery at Leesburg, Va. Members of his family were among the 300 mourners attending Masonici rites at the grave

Special Dispatch to The Post

Leesburg, Va., Nov. 27.—Ward Loveless was buried this afternoon in the upper slope of historic Union Cemetery.

Three hundred persons thronged the century-old burial ground to attend the last rites for the 51-year-old Washington attorney and Loudoun County squire who was robbed and murdered at his Peonian Springs manor house early Monday morning.

Few of the throng were curiosity seekers. It was made up largely of kin, business associates, fraternal brothers and friends, who filled 75 automobiles in the funeral procession from the house to the grave.

The body reposed in a bronze casket, blanketed with lilies and roses.

Barristers Lodge, of Washington, conducted traditional Masonic rites at the estate and the grave.

Mrs. Irene Loveless, the widow, sat silently in a car by the plot while the ritual was being performed. Two daughters, Mrs. Albert Carr and Mrs. George Groff, wept softly, and Arthur Loveless, the slain lawyer's aged father, gave way to anguish in his heart.

There weren't many neighbors or Leesburg townsfolk at the final rites. Everybody here knew of the Washington attorney who owned much farm land in the county, but few knew him personally.

The Masonic services were conducted by Aubrey Myers, past master, and the benediction was given by the Rev. Harvey W. Goddard. Pallbearers included John E. McClure, Fred O. Graves, John Ristine, Arthur Fast, James Williamson and Sam Hazard.

The cemetery, named Union long before the War Between the States through a merger of church cemeteries, is the resting place for the remains of many pioneer Virginians, foremost of whom is Charles Fenton Mercer, father of the Virginia school system.

Boy Tells How Loveless Met Death; Pal Started Shooting During Robbery Fight, He Says

By a Staff Correspondent

Cumberland, Ky., Nov. 27—In this mining town of "bloody" Harlan County, a hard-faced boy of 16 sat in police headquarters today and told how he and his pal robbed and mortally wounded Ward Loveless, 51-year-old attorney of Washington and Leesburg.

The boy was Paul Bernard Hoback, son of a railroad fireman, and one of eight children. His companion was Tommy Peters, also 16, an orphan and a drifter, who first said he was born in Norfolk and later said his birthplace was Washington, D. C.

As Hoback talked, Policeman Jimmy Johnson made notes. This is the story, as Johnson relayed it to a reporter of The Washington Post:

Hoback and Peters went to the Loveless home on foot at 11 o'clock Sunday night, an hour when Loveless was returning from the Columbia Country Club. They ransacked Loveless' colonial mansion, and then waited two hours to rob Loveless "because he was the richest man around Leesburg and made $600 an hour."

Loveless, returning about 1 a. m. Monday, entered by the back door and went to the kitchen, presumably to get a late snack. Hoback and Peters made a noise so as to lure him from the kitchen. Here Policeman Johnson read from his notes, quoting Hoback:

"I came from behind the dresser. I told him (Loveless) to stick 'em up. He screamed and grabbed my gun (a .25-caliber automatic).

"He slung me on the floor and the gun went off. The bullet hit me on the forehead. We kept on fighting. I was hit in the side of the head. I told Tommy I was shot.

"I asked him to hit him on the head, but Tommy started shooting.

"I got away and ran into the next room. Loveless ran after me. I picked up a vase (apparently a silver platter) and threw it at him.

"I tried to get out the front door. It was locked. I started up the steps. We fought there. I got away and ran half way up the steps. Then I turned around and kicked him down the steps."

Hoback, whose nickname is "Pete," made no specific mention of the four shots that struck Loveless from a .32-caliber revolver, but he indicated at this point that the fight had pretty much left Loveless.

His story continues:

"He asked me what we wanted. I told him to give us his money. He pulled his pocketbook out of his pants pocket.

"I then told him to get up, which he did. He did not act like he was hurt.

"Then we had him walk to a closet. Then we put a dresser (an old-fashioned sideboard) in front of it. He tried to shove it open. We told him to stop shoving the door. Then we unlocked the side door and went out.

"We got in his car and drove to Frederick, Md., and different places until we came here. We threw the guns out before we got to Frederick."

Policeman Johnson said he asked Hoback how they got the guns.

"We bought them two days before," he quoted Hoback as saying."

To a question about money, Johnson said, Hoback replied:

"We didn't get any money."

The officer said that the boys told him that they found a $50 check in Loveless' wallet, and he quoted them as saying that they wrote a note on the back of this to the effect that Loveless had been injured and needed help. This they shoved under a farmhouse door somewhere along the rout of their flight.

Leesburg Girl Has a Good Wor d for 'Pete' Hoback

By Sam Stayisky
Post Staff Writer

Leesburg, Va., Nov. 27.—Folks who knew "Pete" Hoback, 16-year-old confessed slayer of his former employer, Ward Loveless, had little good to say about "Pete" today in recalling his ten weeks' stay here—that is, all except a shy and pretty schoolgirl.

Gertrude Thomas, 14, and dark-blondish, liked "Pete." And he liked her.

"He was always nice to me," the young miss said. "We never went dancing or to movies because I joined church, and it was forbidden.

"But he came to visit me many times since we met about two months ago. And when I was sick he came every night to keep me company."

All this the girl's mother, Mrs. Earle Thomas, confirmed today, when interviewed at their cottage near the railroad tracks. Gertrude's father is a railroad worker.

Gertrude, whose cute smile gives her age away, hadn't seen "Pete" since November 16, the Sunday before the murder of Loveless, Washington attorney and reputedly the largest landholder in Loudoun County. And she had wondered where he had gone. Yesterday she knew, and it was all too confusing for the little schoolgirl to understand.

MRS. OLLIE CARROLL, aunt of Paul Hoback. Her nephew and his companion, Tommy Peters, went to her home in Cumberland, Ky., after leaving Leesburg, Va.

Others who knew Hoback drew a different picture of him.

Mr. and Mrs. Arthur S. Hough, at whose place Hoback boarded until a week before the murder, said he kept strictly to himself. "He had a mean look about him all the time," Hough remarked.

Only a week before leaving the house, Hoback brought Tommy Peters to live with him. Tommy, who's 16 but taller than "Pete," also admittedly participated in the slaying. Tommy, Hough remembered, had good manners.

One night, Hough said, "Pete" Hoback came home drunk. And one night he got so drunk he didn't get home. Bob Attleman, night patrolman here, said he had to arrest Hoback that night because the youth insisted on becoming boisterous.

Claude Honicon, of nearby Waterford, who managed Loveless' large holdings, denounced Hoback as "worthless, sullen and mean."

"I had to fire Hoback five weeks ago," he said.

Secret Probe Of U. S. Copper Supply Opens

By the United Press

Congress has initiated a double-barreled, secret investigation of measures undertaken by the Office of Production Management and the Supply Priorities and Allocations Board to increase domestic copper production for use in both defense and nondefense industries, it was disclosed last night.

This probe will be followed by an inquiry into the administration of the whole priorities program.

A House Appropriations Subcommittee yesterday summoned OPM Priorities Director Donald M. Nelson—who also serves as SPAB executive director—for secret testimony on the question of increasing copper production.

It was revealed that the Truman Committee investigating the national defense program will begin similar hearings on December 9, and high OPM and SPAB officials, union leaders and copper company executives will be asked to appear.

Hand of REA Seen

The Rural Electrification Administration which has been told by the OPM that its needs for copper wire must be subjugated to defense "because of the critical shortage" was said to have prompted the inquiry.

John Church and David Ubelacker, OPM, copper and zinc officials, appeared before the House subcommittee at the same time Hugh Fulton, Truman Committee general counsel, laid the groundwork at the OPM for the Senate probe. Fulton conferred with aides to OPM Materials Director William L. Batt "regarding the supply problem."

The House subcommittee asked Nelson point blank: "What are you going to do about increasing copper supply?"

Nelson replied to the subcommittee interrogation that the "entire question" will be resubmitted to SPAB next week.

Slattery Protests

One high REA official said the investigations also will determine "what happened" to about 57,000 tons of copper that was allotted through A-10 ratings by OPM during October "probably to private power companies." The REA on the other hand, was said to have received only 2500 tons for its unfinished lines since August.

REA Administrator Harry Slattery has charged that the OPM is "sabotaging" the REA program.

The REA has about 50,000 miles of poles and equipment set up which is waiting principally on the allocatio nof 25,000 tons of copper for wire. SPAB was said by defense officials to have considered a plan yesterday to give REA about 12,000 tons of copper on a 2000 tons a month basis. This plan is being studied by Price Control Administrator Leon Henderson, who also is director of the OPM's civilian supply division.

2 Boys, 16, Admit Slaying Loveless in Robbery

mansion. These included:

Loveless' wallet, found in the back of the Ford; Loveless' gold watch—given him by his father when he was 17—found on Peters; a supply of .25-caliber cartridges found on Peters, and a pair of old, muzzle-loading dueling pistols, found in the car.

How the boys, lacking an automobile, thought of going to the Loveless farm 7 miles outside of Leesburg has been something of a mystery. But it developed tonight that Virginia authorities suspect them of stealing an automobile last weekend while on a robbery rampage.

In Winchester, Va., Police Chief C. W. Hollis said Hoback and Peters were wanted in connection with a series of burglaries there over the weekend, and for the theft of an automobile.

This automobile belonged to Edgar Nelson, and was abandoned by the thieves last Sunday in the Blue Ridge Mountains, not a great distance from Waverly, the 290-acre Loveless farm. The car was abandoned after it had been damaged in a crash.

A store, a dry cleaning establishment and two service stations were robbed in Winchester. Two youths disappeared shortly thereafter. They had registered Friday morning at the tourist home of Mrs. L. L. Hockman as "Billy Akens" and "Tommie Peters." They left early Sunday without paying their bill.

Hoback told Policeman Johnson in Cumberland that it was on Sunday that they decided to rob Loveless, whom they regarded as a Croesus.

The Virginia authorities plan to check in Winchester and see whether anybody with the initials A. T. had a hat in Winchester dry-cleaning establishment that was robbed. A hat bearing such initials was left behind in the Loveless mansion by the killers. Peters had not hat when he was arrested at dawn this morning in Appalachia, Va.

Commonwealth's Attorney Harrison said tonight, after he and his associates had grilled the boys for two hours, that Peters seemed as "gentle as a little girl." But some of the others described Hoback as a "tough hombre."

When they reached Bristol this evening, "Pete" Hoback and Tommy Peters were filthy, their faces and their shirts covered with grime and coal dust.

Hoback is short and dark-haired. A native of the railroad town of Bluefield, W. Va., he is one of eight children. His father is H. R. Hoback, a fireman on the Norfolk & Western Railroad.

(Mrs. Hoback, the boy's mother, said in Bluefield last night that he ran away from home because he did not like school. She said she understood that he had worked in Leesburg for several months, but she said his girl friend received a letter from him saying he had left there with a companion on November 16.)

(At Leesburg, Claude Honican, partner of Loveless in his farming interests, said Hoback had been employed as a farm hand on the Loveless estate but had been discharged five weeks ago "because he was sullen and wouldn't work.)

Tommy Peters is taller than his pal, and had blond silky hair. He told police that his father died about 15 years ago, and his mother about a year and a half ago. He said he had been "floating around" ever since.

Hoback was wearing a dirty, varicolored cap today, but Peters was hatless.

After the Loveless murder was discovered, a hat was found in the breakfast room. On the inner band were the initials A. T. Dr. Richard Rosenberg, deputy coroner of the District of Columbia, made laboratory tests on the hat, and found strands of hair in it—blond, silky strands, he said.

The two youths were captured after their 500-mile flight because of a newspaper story and because of the civic consciousness of Mrs. Ollie Carroll, of Cumberland, Ky. She is Hoback's aunt, the sister of his father.

The boys arrived in Cumberland at about 4 o'clock Tuesday afternoon and called on Mrs. Carroll. On Wednesday evening, Mrs. Carroll was reading the Knoxville News-Sentinal, which carried an account out of Leesburg of the Loveless murder.

Mrs. Carroll momentarily put down the paper. The boys picked it up, read a short time and then slipped out of the house.

Mrs. Carroll noticed that they did not take the Ford coupe in which they had arrived. Rereading the news story, she noted the Virginia license number, which had been broadcast by the police—300-364. This tallied with the number on the Car.

Mrs. Carroll then notified the Cumberland police, and the hunt for the boys began.

Commonwealth's Attorney Harrison today praised Mrs. Carroll. He said she "rose above all obligations of flesh and blood for the welfare of the public and her duty to her fellow man. I admire her beyond expression," he said.

Policemen Johnson and Hogg learned from a taxicab driver that he had taken the boys to Appalachia, Va., about 25 miles away. The cab driver said that one of the boys had a bandaged hand. The trip cost them $3.

In Appalachia the policemen made inquiries at the Houston Hotel. Yes, the proprietor told them, the boys were in a room upstairs. The policemen went up.

"Open the door, Tommy," they yelled, pounding on the door, "Open up, Pete."

After about 10 minutes, the door opened and the boys submitted to arrest. Although their confessed crime was one of the clumsiest on record, they seemed surprised and expressed wonderment over how the authorities had managed to find them.

From Appalachia, the Cumberland officers took the boys back into Kentucky. Meantime, the Leesburg authorities had been notified from Cumberland and were on their way down, armed with warrants charging murder.

This afternoon, after the boys had waived extradition, Commonwealth's Attorney Harrison gave the signal for the trip back to Leesburg by way of Bristol.

While the boys were being taken to the Bristol jail for the night, The Post reporter asked them if they had committed the murder.

They shuffled and swayed, and finally Peters mumbled, "Not any statement." Hoback merely said, "No."

Loveless' wallet, which was found in the back of the coupe, contained his Masonic cards, District of Columbia and Virginia drivers' licenses, and credit cards for several air lines. The District driver's license gave Loveless' Washington address as 5221 Connecticut Avenue, and the Virginia license as Peonian Springs.

The Cumberland police learned that Hoback and Peters, while they were wandering around that town on Tuesday and Wednesday, were trying to sell a .32-caliber revolver on which was stamped the name of Charles A. Carr.

Lieut. Albert L. Carr, of Edgewood Arsenal, Loveless' son-in-law, told police Monday that he had left a broken .32 revolver at the Waverly mansion.

Police said that Hoback offered to sell the revolver to James Robertson, a high school sophomore and National Youth Administration worker, for $15, then came down to $10, and finally to $8.

They said that Robertson promised to buy it as soon as he got his next NYA check.

instances, would put the violator out of business.

2. Authority for the administrator to buy and sell foreign or domestic commodities with provision for a revolving fund with which to engage in the transactions. The purpose of this provision is to give the administrator additional means of controlling prices as well as to subsidize high-cost producers.

3. Concentration of all powers in the hands of one man.

Republican leaders last night were confident of defeating the licensing amendment and of either striking down or modifying the selling amendment. They also believed they had an excellent chance of restricting the power of the administrator through amendment of the bill to establish a board of review with authority to set aside ceiling orders on appeal from producers.

Democratic leaders were reported last night to be ready to make concessions—but only if the opposition is able to demonstrate sufficient strength—toward modifying the selling amendment and accepting the board of review proposal. But this, according to Representative Wolcott, of Michigan, ranking Republican on the Banking Committee, will not be enough.

Serving the Needs of DEFENSE

Whatever the obstacles, we shall do our best to provide Washington with ample and dependable telephone service.

THE WORKINGS of the National Defense Program have brought thousands of new people to Greater Washington, turning the city into a veritable beehive of activity.

Inevitably, this has created an enormous demand for telephone service.

Some 59,500 telephones will be added to the system this year—eighty-seven per cent more than last year. Out-of-town calls have increased fifty-five per cent; local calls nineteen per cent.

To supply the switchboards, cables and other facilities needed to serve this growth, this Company has planned and is engaged in a construction program that will involve expenditures of over 20 million dollars—more than twice the annual expenditure of recent years.

Much of our property requires many of the raw materials that are also needed for armament and it is becoming increasingly difficult to get all the equipment and supplies that we require. But we'll do our best to provide good service whenever and wherever it is needed.

In spite of more business, the ratio of our earnings to our plant investment will be substantially lower than last year—the consequence of mounting payrolls, increasing costs and taxes.

But whatever comes we'll do our best—for Defense first—and then for you. We think you'd want it that way.

"RISE AND SHINE." Twentieth Century-Fox picturization of James Thurber's book, "My Life and Hard Times," adapted to the screen by Herman J. Directed by Allan Dwan. At Loew's Capitol Theater.

NOW THAT THE FOOTBALL SEASON is practically over, those who missed all of the big games can learn with some finality precisely what they were not like by attending Loew's Capitol Theater this week.

The new Twentieth Century-Fox number called "Rise and Shine," theoretically, is a "football picture," heavily studded with gangster inlays, but not like any other "gridiron classic" ever whipped up out of a goal-line nightmare. Any similarity between the screen play Herman J. Mankiewicz has churned out of James Thurber's book of "My Life and Hard Times" and sanity is purely accidental. Anyone caught laughing at it, obviously, must be tetched in the haid. So we and some 3,999 others in the Capitol yesterday are lunatics. And all cheered up about it! We had a swell time.

In outline, "Rise and Shine" would give the impression of being just another carbon copy of the old pigskin parable about the miracle-man in moleskin, kidnaped at the last minute so Notre Dame can beat dear old Clayton by a score of 5 to 0. That rusty old mainspring of all football fables is in there working, to be sure, but it is so completely surrounded by comic mechanisms and musical attachments that it functions almost like new. It isn't the plot that so much matters as the cockeyed characters mixed up in it—and I mean mixed up!

There is, first of all, this blubbery behemoth, Boley, whose full name is Bolenkiewicz—or something equally unpronounceable. Boley has never heard about insomnia and has the I. Q. of an underprivileged hookworm, but he is a one-man blitz out there on that field. So he is ensconced in the home of Prof. Murray, who is an amateur magician on the side and should have come out of "You Can't Take It With You," but didn't. His daughter is the college cheer leader. It becomes their major job to see that Boley gets his sleep and is protected against his phobia of deep water. But in a distant city is the "Menace," who likes to bet his crooked kale on sure things. So he sends the dancer out of his night club to Clayton to see to it that the team goes through the season undefeated until that last game with Notre Dame—on which he will clean up all the potatoes in the national debt. Which is a few potatoes. That's where the kidnaping business comes in. So Jimmy McGonigle falls in love with Prof. Murray's daughter, likes Boley, goes, in a big way, for "Grandpa," who should be Harpo Marx, but isn't, and decides to settle down there and go straight. So the Menace and his thugs, including "Seabiscuit," who whinnies like a horse and must make Charlie Judels pretty sore about the whole thing, motors in to take charge. What happens after that is like crazy. To top the whole lunacy off, Boley runs the length of the field three times to score one touchdown and impale Notre Dame on a sharp, single point! Then he goes back to sleep. There are times when it's great to be crazy, no kidding, and this is one of them.

All-Star Cast of Psychopathics

Without a stellar cast willing to become, temporarily, peresitical subjects, "Rise and Shine" could be pretty dreary. But it has that sort of cast and is hilariously slap-happy, instead. Jack Oakie, especially when passing his final examination, is perfect as the mastodonic moron, and Linda Darnell, at last emanicipated from being Tyrone Power's tear-drenched wife, is radiant as a singing coed of her own age. George Murphy as the reconstructed dancer, not only sings and dances as nobody else but Fred Astaire can, but chips in a fine comedy performance to boot. Walter Brennan, as the blonde-chasing drummer boy, who has been making up lost time ever since the War Between the States, carries a red-hot flambeau for Ruth Donnelly, Raymond Walburn's free-wheeling wife, and Milton Berle kicks up considerable dust with his "Seabiscuit" horseplay. Sheldon Leonard is his habitual gangster and Donald Meek the goofy black-magic Prof. Murray. For the football coach, they've taken Donald MacBride out of his army uniform, but he's still a top sergeant. Even the Murray family dog is a canine mental case.

Headlining the stage bill, Jack Durant was a solid hit at yesterday's first performance in his familiar "But-can-Gable-do-this" routine, which remains a unique routine even if it is wearing a bit shiny in spots. Bobby May is the first to show, with his amazingly deft juggling, and Sue Read and Her Manhattan Knights, a singing quintet, next. Miss Read and her boys were cheated out of a hit by a dead microphone that completely nullified their most pretentious number. Francis and Grey contribute a contortionistic dance-story that is a sinuous marvel of serpentine grace. Add to all this, Sam Jack Kaufman's Neapolitan overture, Art Brown's singing bee, Lynn Allison's first anniversary "Il Bacio" and the Fox Movietone News and you've really got something to hypo the funnybone.

Little

Forming one of those casts that remain splendid through the years, Charles Laughton, Mary Boland, Charlie Ruggles, ZaSu Pitts and Roland Young are again to be seen at the Little in "Ruggles of Red Gap." This comedy of 1935, adapted from Harry Leon Wilson's story, remains a rare film.

"Ruggles of Red Gap" is the story of the ambitious frontier family of the nineties who determine to achieve the niceties of civilization by importing a butler from England, which they do, however indirectly, with the help of aloof, restrained Charles Laughton. Mary Boland, of course, plays the striving wife, spouting malapropisms she was ultimately to get to the source of when she played Mrs. Malaprop on the stage of the National last week. Charlie Ruggles, not to be confused with the gentleman's gentleman of the title, acts her husband, and Miss Pitts and Young are allowed their moments.

Talk About Gay Old Playboys!

WALTER BRENNAN as the village cutup, held over from the Civil War, in "Rise and Shine," the daffy football comedy now making a madhouse of the screen at Loew's Capitol Theater. LEONARD LYONS

Broadway Potpourri

New York, Nov. 27.

Charles Davila is organizing a Free-Rumania movement in New York . . . Victor will make recordings of Maurice Evans and Judith Anderson, in some highlights from "Macbeth" . . . Charlie Chaplin is making a full-length movie from his "Gold Rush" by using some of those portions which were cut from the film, when it was released originally . . . The editors of "GO," the 5 cent magazine which is rapidly becoming the most important in the entertainment publication field, have hit upon a novel way of advertising it. Six of their officers are pilots and they've organized their own flight-squadron. On the wings of all their planes flying over New York is the word "GO," visible from the streets. George K. Arthur, the former movie star, is publisher of the magazine and one of the fliers . . . Tallulah Bankhead reopens in Philadelphia, Dec. 15.

MAURICE EVANS

Gene Fowler is chairman of Public Relations, for the Fight for Freedom's Hollywood committee. He discussed with Ben Hecht a list of suggestinos for improving the campaign. Hecht advised: "We must have an important Labor man on our board" . . . "You mean," said Fowler, "somebody like Bioff" . . . "Not exactly," replied Hecht. "We want someone not so gaudy."

When Morrie Ryskind was a student at Columbia's Pulitzer School of Journalism, he was suspended before graduation day, and dropped from the class . . . Fifteen years later the trustees of Columbia presented a Pulitzer prize to Ryskind, for having written—in collaboration with George S. Kauffman—the musical comedy, "Of Thee I Sing." And now Morrie is an instructor at the Pulitzer School of Journalism . . . Sunday afternoon a party was given in his honor. Dean Ackerman, head of the school of journalism, presented him with a cake. Its icing was in the shape of a diploma, signifying that at last he was entitled to add after his name, "Columbia, '17" . . . "This is a unique official diploma," announced Dean Ackerman. "For you can have it, and eat it, too."

Before Al Bloomingdale, the producer of the new hit musical, "High Kickers," married Barbara Brewster, of the Brewster Twins, he invited her to the Stork Club, after the show. There he told Barbara of his great affection . . . "You are the only one in the world for me," Bloomingdale assured her. "No one can match you, in looks or charm. As far as I'm concerned, your loveliness is incomparable" "Tell me Al," asked Barbara. "Why, when you invited me out tonight, did you put that crayon mark on my left arm" . . . "Oh, that?" replied Bloomingdale. "I did it so that I could distinguish you from your twin sister."

The management of "Lady in the Dark" supplies all the gowns and shoes worn onstage by Gertrude Lawrence, star of the show. And her attire is of the best quality . . . Miss Lawrence's shoes, for example, cost $85 a pair. She notified the management that she needed a new pair of shoes, but there was a delay in filling that order. Miss Lawrence refused to wear her worn shoes. And so she walked onstage, barefoot, wearing a $1200 gown, and lamenting: "They send me out here like a ragamuffin."

Hollywood's most popular restaurant is the one owned by Mike Romanoff. He has become a respected, established member of the community—a thriving, efficient restaurateur. His patrons include all the stars of the film colony. Hollywood has been good to Mike, and provides him with the substantial, regular income he somehow was unable to achieve in New York . . . A few weeks ago T. W. A. gave official recognition to Romanoff's status as Hollywood's premier restaurant man by offering him the contract to supply all the food for its East-bound planes. Mike signed, although there is little profit in it . . . "Then why did you make the deal?" he was asked . . . "Because," sighed Romanoff, "it provides for my getting free trips to New York."

HEDDA HOPPER

A Trick Play, With Goal to Go

Hollywood, Nov. 27.

I don't claim to know how Hollywood will react, or if it could be arranged, but Capt. Frank Summers, now of the movies but late scout for Connie Mack, has come up with a slick idea for raising Red Cross funds. The Sugar Bowl and Rose Bowl games kind of end the football season. But every sports fan and writer in the country has always wanted to see the winners of those games play off. So how about it this year? The week following January 1, let's turn them loose in our Coliseum, which seats a mass of people, let the boys go to it, and give the money to charity — with Hollywood playing host to the football heroes of 1941. Slick, eh? Well, why can't it be done?

MICKEY ROONEY

William Saroyan's screenplay for Mickey Rooney will be called "Afton Waters." Which is a scream—a Scottish story written by an Armenian, for a Jewish producer, to star an Irish actor. Well, that's America, thank heaven!

It takes an old-timer to help an old-timer. Harry Sherman has cast Bill Farnum in a grand part for "American Empire." I'm so happy for them both, 'cause Bill's just as good as he ever was. He did a scene for me in my second Hedda Hopper's Hollywood feature short, in which I intercut the first picture I ever did with Bill, made 26 years ago. Boy! Was I corney! It isn't everyone who has a chance to see herself as she was a quarter of a century ago. And Harry Sherman will produce a picture starring Bill Hart, if his eyes are good enough after this operation, and Bill Farnum. If you feel as I do about them, you'll be standing in line to see it.

Incidentally, I had a letter from Oscar Morgan in New York. He took Bill Hart to a luncheon back there, attended by 800 people, and wrote that never in his 27 years experience in picture business has he herad a reception like the one given Hart. Which kind of gives you a glow around the heart these chilly days.

Father Flanagan has bestowed an honor on Sybil Bowan that would be hard to beat. She's been made honorary citizen in Boys Town. Sybil has gotten money donations, and also clothes, for the boys to make over in their tailoring shop.

Rosemary De Camp is really coming into her own. She'll be George M. Cohan's mother in "Yankee Doodle Dandy." Rosemary's new dark hair is so becoming . . . Incidentally, "Yankee Doodle Dandy" has George Hopkins, set decorator, up to his ears in research. One scene takes place in President Roosevelt's study, when he decorates Cohan. Study will be reproduced exactly, even to the stuff on the President's desk, which includes a statue of Pop-Eye the Sailor!

RESINOL OINTMENT AND SOAP

Rent Bill Sent to White House

housing accommodations. It also is recognized that although there may have been some unfair and unreasonable variations from this standard in individual cases as of January 1, 1941, the generally prevailing standards of rental at that time had not yet been substantially distorted.

"All rentals of housing accommodations in the District will remain subject to adjustment to compensate for such readily ascertainable items as substantial changes, up or down, in taxes, maintenance or operating cost or expenses; substantial capital improvements and alterations; and changes in the character or amount of services supplied by the landlord."

Strengthening Move.

Senator Burton pointed out that the amendment strengthens the opportunity of a tenant to have his rent rate reviewed by the rent administrator upon a complaint that it is "unduly high."

The rent administrator then "should review and adjust such rental so as to bring it in line with the scale of rentals recognized in the balance of the act," he said.

The first legislation in the country providing for rent control during the present emergency, the bill is expected to be a model for State Legislatures throughout the Nation.

Representative Randolph (Democrat), of West Virginia, chairman of the House District Committee and sponsor of the bill, said last week that President Roosevelt has expressed hope of its speedy enactment.

Head Would Be Local Man

One of the bill's "model" features is its provision for appointment of a rent administrator by local officials—the District Commisioners in the case of Washington. The administrator must submit a semi-annual report to Congress. He must have been a bona-fide resident of the District for the last three years and will receive an annual salary of $7500.

If signed by the President, the act will remain in force until December 31, 1945.

Another important District measure is due for legislative action today when Representative Randolph will seek in the House unanimous consent agreement to a bill permitting the District government to share up to two million dollars in Lanham Act funds for national defense construction.

Compulsory Arbitration Hit by Labor, Management

pulsory arbitration or any other legislative curbs.

Before the House Labor Committee, Frank R. Hook, of the National Association of Manufacturers, and before a Senate Judiciary subcommittee, James A. Emery, general counsel of the association, also opposed compulsory arbitration as "a superficial approach" that "treats the disease after it develops."

Hook and Emery went on record for penalties against mass picketing, a secret ballot before strikes, bans on "wildcat," jurisdictional and closed-shop strikes during the emergency and injunctions against "unlawful" strikes—the Smith bill "teeth" which the House Judiciary Committee is demanding.

Labor spokesmen oppose any of these and were on common ground with the National Association of Manufacturers only in their vehement opposiiton to compulsory arbitration. It was following their testimony that Ramspeck voiced doubt that the committee would approve that provision of his bill.

Senator Connally appeared before the afternoon session of the committee to explain his measure and later Ramspeck started work on a new bill draft incorporating Connally plan features, to be held in readiness for today's committee vote.

The Texan's proposal empowers the President to take over a plant whenever its defense production is hindered by strikes, labor disputes or for any other cause. When the Government takes over, labor relations, including prevailing closed or open shop conditions, would be automatically frozen for the duration of Government control. Wage scales alone would be left open, subject to determination by a three-man board appointed by the President.

If compulsory arbitration fails of approval in today's House committee vote, Ramspeck is expected to submit cooling off, conciliation and mediation provisions of his own bill, coupling these with the plant-seizure plan as a club if mediation fails. During the cooling-off period, the Mediation Board would be empowered to enjoin strikes.

Workers Are Warned

During his testimony, Connally warned worker representatives that unless they accept "reasonable" legislation "the wrath of the American people may take form in more radical, more punitive, more burdensome and more onerous legislation.

While the House Labor Committee was striving to report a bill in time for House consideration Monday, the Senate Labor subcommittee moved into executive session in another race to agree on a bill. Members indicated they would write a measure of their own before the Connally bill reaches the Senate floor via the Senate Judiciary Committee.

Before the Senate Labor Subcommittee was a substitute for the original waiting period bill of Senator Ball (Republican), of Minnesota, providing a series of procedural steps for settling strikes, rather than punitive action.

"I am convinced," said Ball, "that what we need is not to crack down, but to establish first a definite defense labor policy and then a set of procedure to settle strikes before they occur."

Ballot Hearing Set

Today the subcommittee will hold hearings on the more sweeping Herring bill, of which a secret ballot before strikes is a feature.

Connally, meanwhile, completed Senate Judiciary Subcommittee hearings on his plant-seizure bill and his Senate group will meet today for a vote. Opposing the Connally measure, C. I. O. Secretary Carey charged that under it "organized labor's legitimate expansion would be stopped in its tracks." Carey again urged C. I. O. President Murray's proposal that the President convene a conference of labor, Government and industry "that will promote full defense production and at the same time protect the rights of free American workers."

Before the House Labor Committee, President Green, of the A. F. L., recommended the creation of a national war labor board along the lines of the World War board, which formulated principles that then governed relations between employers and employes.

Defense Scandal

It is difficult to imagine a more inexcusable blow to public morale than the graft and waste which are being exposed by the Senate Defense Investigating Committee. The testimony indicates that some of the officials supervising construction of the Wolf Creek shell-loading plant in Tennessee have spent public funds after the manner of the proverbial drunken sailor. Automobiles for the transportation of officers and their secretaries were apparently rented and then purchased for fabulous sums. Employes frequently had nothing to do and sometimes drew double-time pay for loafing. Subdepartment heads made a practice of hiring relatives at good salaries for inconsequential jobs. One aged man drew 65 cents an hour for killing flies. In view of this testimony it was not surprising to hear that the plant remains incomplete after 51 million dollars have been spent on it. The original estimate was 20 million.

Every citizen who learns of this shocking waste of public funds will probably feel a personal sense of grievance. Heavy taxes have been laid upon everyone to help defray the enormous cost of the defense program and still heavier levies are in prospect. Young men are being asked to sacrifice a year or more of their time for military training and service. Thousands of workers are losing their jobs because materials formerly used in civilian industries are being diverted to defense plants. Consumers are foregoing many conveniences. For the most part these sacrifices are made cheerfully, but willingness to sacrifice for defense may easily be undermined by the spectacle of defense officials themselves taking advantage of the emergency to waste funds that must soon or late come out of the taxpayer's pocket.

Sometimes, to be sure, necessity justifies extraordinary costs to bring a plant into production at the earliest possible moment. But no plea of emergency can excuse reckless extravagance which has no relation to the efficient production of weapons. On the contrary, nepotism, petty graft and wasteful expenditures are the gravest sort of disservice to the Nation. The Army must know that every dollar counts in the production of weapons against Hitlerism and in sustaining public faith in the defense effort. Accordingly it should lose no time in wiping out these indefensible practices.

Relief Of Tobruk

The recapture of Regezh and the establishment of a junction between advancing New Zealand forces and the besieged British garrison at Tobruk constitute the most important single development of the Libyan war since the British offensive began ten days ago. It proves that the British possessed sufficient reserves of men and mechanized equipment to resume the offensive after the initial drive showed signs of bogging down as the result of fierce Axis resistance. It suggests, at the same time, that the Germans and Italians found it impossible to draw on their reserves in western Cyrenaica fast enough and to a large enough extent to meet the latest British thrust.

In a struggle as fluid as that which the present Libyan campaign has proved to be, it is wise to refrain from assuming that the worst is now over for the British. Time alone can tell whether, having recaptured Regezh, the British will now be able to hold it. It is possible that the trapped German divisions in the area between Tobruk-Regezh and the Egyptian border will be able to break through the barrier that has now been erected between them and their supply bases to the west. Or, alternatively, that they might stage a counterattack in such force as to compel the enemy to relinquish his latest gains. If such attempts fail, the path to further and perhaps far-reaching British advances to the west will be wide open. Already, in fact, the relief of Tobruk makes it possible for the British to supply their advance units in Libya by sea—an advantage of tremendous importance—as well as to bring Bengazi, Tripoli and other Axis supply centers within short bombing range.

Now, as before, gains by one side or the other in the Libyan struggle cannot be measured in the number of square miles taken. This must be measured by the volume of losses inflicted on the enemy and the relation of these losses to the total available strength possessed by the opposing sides. The British admit that their casualties in Libya during these ten days of fighting have been great. They have not yet succeeded in destroying the enemy forces. Fierce fighting continues to rage all along the line. And, while the odds would now seem definitely to favor the British, the final outcome of the present struggle in the Regezh sector and other sectors of the Libyan battlefield is not yet entirely clear.

Across The Pacific

The interpretation which Far Eastern hands put upon Mr. Kurusu's mission seems to have been correct. Mr. Kurusu wanted, first, to see whether America was bluffing, and, secondly, to stall for time while the Japanese unimpededly added to their military strength in Indo-China. In such circumstances a "limited accord" was patently absurd. An accord based upon the relaxation of our defense trade policies is now shown to have been envisaged by the Japanese only as a scrap of paper. The Japanese jingoes desperately need war supplies. With or without them they intend to go ahead with their plans of conquest when a fresh opportunity for a "snatch" presents itself.

A limited accord, as a matter of fact, would have been worse than useless. It would have imperiled our relations with the nation which has stood off the Japanese for over four years, namely, Free China. How could even a limited accord have been made to look palatable to the fighting Chinese? The task would have been impossible. And the result would have been unfortunate, to say the least. For the moves of the Japanese clearly show that we are dependent upon the Chinese in any approaching effort to keep what remains of our Pacific position. They may soon become our allies as well as our friends. Accordingly we must stop treating them as orphans among the nations arrayed against Hitlerism, east and west. Specifically we should leave no stone unturned to bolster up their protection of the Burma Road and to create with plane deliveries a new Burma Road through the air.

Certainly the signs point to a showdown for control of the land and sea trade routes to the great base at Singapore which are so vital to our own defense economy as well as to our Pacific position. The season for alternative Siberian snatching is apparently over. Russia's defense of Moscow and the advent of the snows would seem to make a Siberian intervention a stale and unprofitable adventure. It is not only the handicaps of Arctic campaigning that are deterring the Japanese. The Japanese would have to combat a Russian strength in Siberia which has not been greatly reduced by the fighting demands in European Russia. And Japanese army memories must still be smarting from the Nomonhan drubbing that the Japanese army got three years ago from the Siberian Russians. Accordingly the navy brand of expansionism is "the stroke of the moment" upon which official Japan appears to be counting for the furtherance of its fantastic dream of Asian hegemony.

On this gambit the Japanese people have and will have nothing to say. They will be told by a press which has just lost its last vestige of freedom that there is no other way to escape encirclement. They will not hear a word about the alternative Cordell Hull way. That is the way of fruitful cooperative development by all the Pacific nations in common. It has again been communicated to Tokyo. But it can be taken by Japan only by a guaranteed renunciation of aggression, and, judging from the Japanese attitude in Washington and the Japanese action in Indo-China, this seems impossible. It is to be hoped that at least Mr. Kurusu has gathered a correct impression about our reaction to any renewal of aggression.

Murder Story

Authorities at Cumberland, Ky., say that the two young boys arrested there have confessed to the murder of the wealthy lawyer, Ward Loveless, at his home near Leesburg, Va., last Monday. Thus it would appear that, with the exception of a few minor details, the case has been solved, so far at least as its police aspects are concerned. Doubtless there are many who will consider that the solution comes as something of an anticlimax. Both crime and motive are shown to have been much cruder and much less melodramatic than some of the hypotheses of reporters and local investigators. According to the statements the boys are said to have made at Cumberland, Loveless was killed while resisting robbery. In short, the one thing that distinguishes this case from a dozen or more recent instances of juvenile crime was the wealth and prominence of the victim. As to the secondary mystery of the Loveless murder—the precise set of circumstances whereby these boys became capable of such mad and brutal deeds—the explanation doubtless would conform in pattern if not in detail to the case histories noted in textbooks on juvenile delinquency. It is almost trite to observe that the increase of juvenile crime bears a close relationship to the spiritual, moral, economic and social dislocations of the age. All these have been enormously aggravated by the world crisis, and will be further aggravated as the crisis is intensified.

Labor Law

An effort has been launched within the labor movement to sidetrack the enactment of one or another of the many labor bills now before Congress. Of course, the effort will fail. The Administration is on record for a bill; Congress has lost its apathy; and an aroused public opinion will not again allow the legislators to slip back into a 'tween-strike lethargy. The problem is to get a law which will be neither repressive nor meaningless. There will be no such danger if the legislative mind is kept on the needs which the riot of defense strikes has demonstrated. In the circumstances of the present emergency, strikes are in the nature of revolts, and would be designated as revolts if they took place among our draftees. Thus the first need of new labor legislation is to lay down the rule that defense production, like military service, must be continuous. The country simply cannot afford any more stoppages. Just as patent, in the light of the racketeering that has been flourishing in the labor movement, is the need for the definition of the social responsibility of our labor unions. On the President's desk is the report on the peacetime relation between the governments and labor unions in the great democracies. This should be available to our legislators. They will find that in no country is a labor union allowed to operate strictly as a private association, and those countries would find intolerable the license that has been permitted in America. At least there should be an accounting of funds, as is the case in Great Britain.

Such legal restraints upon our labor unions would not, of course, rule out labor disputes. But ample machinery is available for the exploration of agreement between the disputants till agreement is obtained. Every effort must first be made to secure agreement by direct negotiations. If such negotiations fail, then conciliation must be tried, next mediation, and, finally, arbitration. But if it is laid down in advance that somewhere on the line agreement must be found without stoppage of work, the machinery of peaceful procedures might well be strengthened by Congressional enactment. The key agency is the National Defense Mediation Board. Congress should endow this agency with the backing of law. If this is done, and a body of principles given to it at the same time, then this agency is likely to prove the final body in the settlement of our labor disputes. If labor leaders would recognize the inevitability of legislation, they could do their movement a service and lessen the chances of a drastic enactment by offering their cooperation in the legislating of principles that cry aloud for a place on our statute book.

Ernest Lapointe

The death Wednesday of Ernest Lapointe, Canada's "second Premier," is a sore blow to the Dominion. No other man in recent years labored more persistently or with greater success to promote unity between the English- and French-speaking populations. Long the spokesman for French-speaking Canada, Mr. Lapointe was something of an institution. He served in Parliament continuously from 1904 and as Minister of Justice in the present Cabinet he was Premier King's right-hand man. Thanks to his ability as a mediator frequently bitter conflicts between English and French elements were usually kept in hand. On occasion, moreover, in matters of national interest, he did not hesitate to oppose the narrow provincial interests of his former constituents in Quebec. Thus, for example, he supported Canada's entry into the war and emerged triumphant in Quebec after a bitter political fight with the provincial Premier, Maurice Duplessis, who decried entry. To Mr. Lapointe, perhaps, more than to any other French-speaking leader, is due the present measure of French-Canadian acceptance of the war. His passing leaves French-speaking Canada without a successor of comparable stature and makes heavier the burden already borne by Premier King.

DEER AT DAWN

The road was shadowy with morning mist,
The trees were hung with drops of amethyst

When, soundless as a thistle on the breeze,
An antlered buck came bounding through the trees.

As sudden as a dappled beam of sun,
He paused to know if he should stand or run.

His coat was mottled golden, and his eyes
Were amber pools of luminous surprise.

I must have breathed, because his haunches flinched
And lifted him like mightly springs unclinched.

As effortlessly as a soaring bird
He went, and not a bough behind him stirred.

The road, when he had gone, was dim and gray
As though the sun had vanished from the day.

Democracy Dangers

ne contest between rationality and emotionality in mankind is perpetual, one representing the laborious struggles of intelligence, the other man's proneness to unrestrained conduct.

In this period of upheaval, when prudent people refrain from expressing individual convictions—when democracy is in abeyance—one may be excused for feeling concern about certain after-effects that may possibly be counteracted, or mitigated, during the upheaval.

In marshaling the forces for and against the foreign policy of this Administration of our Government, resort has included such opprobrious classifications of our people as "interventionists" and "isolationists," the effect of which is to arouse hatred and crystallize division among our people to an extent which will require decades to erase, and I submit that the soundest and most effective patriotism is not developed by such methods.

Another practice which may produce enduring evil effects is indiscriminate appeals to "democracy," as if we are assuming to establish a certain form of government throughout the world, contrary to the principles of international law, which accord to each nation the right to its own form of government. The wise framers of our Constitution did not call our Government a "democracy." The Constitution guarantees to each State "a republican form of government."

If when, with grand gestures, we appeal to the tribunal, emotionality, and exalt democracy (we have no reference to a form of government), are we not appealing to unrestrained disorder, instead of fostering orderly government?

If the contention is not for a form of government, but an abstract conception of democracy, then we are warned by experience against making it a world-wide issue. Wars waged for democracy may produce antidemocratic institutions and practices, as wars waged for Christianity produced anti-Christian institutions and practices.

May I submit that it would be a great service to your readers if you would publish, at this time, Lord Macaulay's letter dated London, May 23, 1857, to Mr. Randall, author of "The Life of Jefferson," on the subject of democracy in the United States. It reads like Revelation.

Peace Overture

From Ankara, Turkey, comes a report that Germany will make a strong bid for peace, proposing Turkey as mediator. This peace offensive (and it will prove very offensive) will be launched when the German armies have concluded the "decisive phase" of their campaign in Russia. Ambassador Franz von Papen is the authority for the statement, also for the "confession" that the Wilhelmstrasse foresaw the strong probability that Great Britain would reject the Reich's overture.

The Nazis, evidently, don't seem to realize even yet that they are absolutely and entirely beyond recognition diplomatically and in every other way, that not only Great Britain but all the civilized world will not consider the task complete until Hitlerism has been vanquished. The United States, too, is arming against this world aggressor, which some so-called believers in democracy seem to forget or at least ignore.

So there can be no doubt that this new "peace" overture will be rejected. One wonders why the Nazis persist in making such gestures. Can it be that doubt of the outcome of the war is beginning to enter their "minds"?

Economic Housing

There is no secret, sudden or inspirational way to devise an economic house. Only by patient detailed study and analysis can one hope to lower house production costs. Never in building history have there been so many different structural materials and equipment "gadgets" available to the house designer and his client.

In the Middle Ages, the most beautiful and perfect stained glass windows were designed and made by master craftsmen who spent generations in developing the artistic potentialities of only 10 or 11 basic colors and tints. Eleven were all that were available. Today, with thousands of different colors and tints to work with, the modern stained-glass designer is overwhelmed by the very complexity of his color palette.

Perhaps the same difficulty is true in housing. High pressure salesmanship, subtle and convincing advertising, untrue claims, disguised as scientific facts, are used to bedevil and bewilder the architect and the home seeker.

Human beings have housed themselves for thousands of years. In an emergency such as the Nation faces today, it might be wise to throw many false claims and "ersatz" products out of the window and start over again with a simpler palette.

Air Raid Shelters

Early this morning a representative of the Federal Government called at the apartment house in which I live to investigate the possibilities for placing an air raid shelter in the basement. The owner of the building is an outstanding isolationist and refused permission.

It seems to me that the isolationist, who has voted for "millions for defense" but to "keep it at home," is the one who would desire these shelters, as he states that we need our defense money to build up a strong Army and Navy here at home. Needing the strong armed forces here, means to me that troubles are expected to start here. Then why not protection for the civilians, especially those who carry on the work of the Government here in the Nation's Capital? Are we not to profit from the experience of the unfortunate countries of Europe? I hope that this gives some of those who have ridiculed this move something to think about.

The author of the letter, "We, the Unorganized Duds," explained the plight of the salaried and professional workers, realistically and forcefully. Streamline Note

In this age, when the old is so quickly dropped if it is cumbersome, it would be well to get some of our States with long names to consider shortening them. Many would like to see a number of syllables chopped off Massachusetts, Connecticut, Pennsylvania and Rhode Island. I suggest Penn, Rhodes, and, as for the rest, I leave it to others.

Railroad Strike

"American Way," The Post's November 24 featured editorial, was entirely reasonable, quite pertinent, and directs attention of informed, thoughtful readers to the Administration procedure in endeavoring to prevent the strike of railroad workers, now scheduled to begin in two weeks. One wonders if that is the American way?

Wage increase demands of the railroad operating brotherhoods have been handled and disposed of as prescribed by Congress in the Railway Labor Act amended; despite which lawful procedure the operating brotherhoods would stop all railroad operations in the country because a statutory fact-finding board's recommendations for increases are not nearly so high as the unions demanded; and in order to forestall the nation-wide rail strike, President Roosevelt has prevailed upon rail managers to negotiate further on rail wage increases with the unions' representatives.

The managers have already performed the moral obligations required by law and thereby agree to pay the increased rates recommended by the fact-finding board. Accordingly, there is nothing for them to negotiate, and their agreement to pay rates above those recommended could be constrained only by assurances of getting back the money in the form of increased rail rates granted by the Interstate Commerce Commission. Such a way would not only be an undue burdening of the public with increased rates to provide wherewithal for such wage increases but, also, would mean collapse of the much vaunted rail labor law, which was amended in 1934, largely "on order" of the rail unions that now flout it.

Rail labor law efficacy in the matter of fact-finding boards' recommendations relies on moral performance by the loser; there is no provision for enforcement by process. The first board was set up by President Roosevelt in 1937, when the brotherhoods had decided to strike in protest against the rail managers' insistence on decreasing pay 15 per cent. That board decided with the brotherhoods 100 per cent, and the managers accepted full defeat without squawk or threat. But as soon as another fact-finding board fails to award the brotherhoods all of their demands, they squawk and threaten, falling back on their power to destroy, temporarily.

"Big business" dominance of our national life would be bad; such dominance by organized labor is worse, while a combine of both would be worst, and prevention of such a devastating combine is a paramount duty of alert Government at all times. This was in the mind of the Sixty-sixth Congress in writing the labor section—Title III—of the Transportation Act, 1920. The law expressly provided that any wage increasing decision of the bipartisan Railroad Labor Board could only be valid if and when one or more of the Public Group members voted in the affirmative—the combined employer-employe groups constituted a numerical board majority. Therefore, insistence upon rail managers and rail labor leaders getting together to get around a wage increase recommended by a fact-finding board, appointed by the President according to law, just doesn't seem to be the American Way.

The Post Impressionist

Washington Melancholy

I picked up the phone on the second ring and answered with my cheeriest "HELLo-o." Telephone calls on Saturday afternoon usually herald events of the coming evening and I was most receptive to an invitation.

"Who is this?" inquired a strange, but not unpleasant feminine voice.

I told her.

"Where . . . I mean, what place is this number?" was the next question.

I told her.

"Someone left this number for me to call, but I guess it must be some other exchange," explained the not unpleasant voice.

I guessed it was, too, and said I was sorry.

"Are you?"

"Uh-huh," I said with a hasty glance at the kitchen door.

"What are you doing?"—and the pleasant voice took on a slight purr.

"Enjoying a day off and at this exact moment an excellent glass of beer," I replied and suited action to words.

"Is it good?"

"Very."

"Wait a minute and I'll join you," said the now laughing and quite pleasant voice.

"There was a brief pause, and then:

"Skoal!" came back the nice voice.

"Skoal!" I repeated—and there was another brief pause.

"You have a fascinating telephone manner—I like your voice," was the next statement from the other end of the line after an audible swallow.

I paid the young lady—and she must be very young—a similar compliment and settled back with my feet propped over the arm of the chair.

"Do you live in a private home or apartment?" she asked.

"Private home," I replied.

"Alone?"

"Nope"—with my wife.

"Is she there?"

"Nope," I lied, watching my wife, tea towel in hand, poke her head around the kitchen door, a large question mark high-lighting her features.

"When will she be home?"

"Pretty soon, now."

"I hope you don't think I'm flirting or anything—I just—well—I'm sort of lonesome," said the charming voice.

I told her she sounded lonesome and I didn't think she was flirting and to keep right on talking.

She then wanted to know what I did—where I worked—and I told her.

"I've always admired newspapermen—there's something about them . . . they're . . . well, there's something about them."

With another glance at the kitchen, where my wife had again retreated to her chores, I said there certainly was.

"What do you look like?" was the next question from the mystery voice.

I gave an honest description.

The lovely voice broke into peals of laughter.

"You're kidding me," she said. "You newspapermen are awfully witty."

My wife stepped back into the kitchen door and when I agreed that yeah, I was pretty witty, she gave me a wry smile and disappeared toward the sink again.

After a few more exchanges, personal and otherwise, my caller half apologized:

"Honestly, I'm getting too bold, but I don't have many people to talk to and this has been such fun."

Male companionship in Washington is currently at the well-known premium, she lamented.

She said she was 22 and I said she sounded much younger. She said that was the trouble—she looked younger, too.

Intimating that the word picture I had painted of myself was a little on the impossible side, she said she would like to get a look at me. I said I'd like to see her, too.

"Maybe you will—some time." And then, with a note of finality, "Thanks for the fun—'bye now," and she hung up.

I took my empty glass to the kitchen.

"What in the world was all that?" My wife turned from the oven where I glimpsed a brand new apple pie.

"Someone," I replied, reaching in the icebox for another can of beer, "had the wrong number."

Relations With France

Revision of Neutrality Act and current British victories in Libya are stunning blows to Hitler. To offset them he seeks to drive Vichy deeper into the axis orbit. The swastika practically already flies over Dakar, Bizerte, and Casablanca. Nazi "tourists," "technicians" and military officers now infest these places.

The prelude to this new raid on France was Marshal Petain's removal of Gen. Maxime Weygand as proconsul. His crime was his strong resistance to Nazi penetration into French Africa. With him goes a stanch friend of America.

In view of all of above we should beat Hitler to the draw and seize and occupy Martinique, St. Pierre et Miquelon, Guadeloupe and French Guiana. The equivalent of what we did in the North Atlantic in taking Iceland and Greenland might well be done in the South Atlantic occupation of these French possessions and would complete our chain of defensive bases in the Caribbean. The seizure would be technical. The lands would be returned to France after the war. We would merely be custodians. For all damages suffered there would be proper compensation.

If France either surrenders her fleet to Hitler and Mussolini or actually sanctions Nazi occupation of Dakar, Bizerte, and Casablanca, and transit of troops and material through Tunisia, Algeria, and Morocco, we should then summarily break off diplomatic relations with the Vichy government and recognize General de Gaulle and his free French colleagues as the appropriate governing power of France.

REP. EMANUEL CELLER.

Three Labor Levels

By Ernest Lindley

Policy Of Collaboration Needed

LINDLEY

First, the specific case, of which the most recent and most troublesome was the captive-mine strike.

Second, legislation establishing a labor policy for the war period and machinery to carry it out.

Third, the enlistment of labor's enthusiastic cooperation in defense production.

The prevailing expectation in Washington is that the arbitration board will grant John L. Lewis substantially what he asked. The union or closed shop raises in many minds fundamental questions of principle. But as a practical matter, the difference between a union shop and what the United Mine Workers already have in the captive mines is not very great. Since 1934, they have had the voluntary check-off. By contract the employer deducts the union dues and sends them to the union offices. In practice, a miner rarely withdraws from the union, and 95 per cent are now union members.

BOTH CAPTIVE and commercial mines had the voluntary check-off until the latter took Lewis' offer of penalties for unauthorized strikes in return for the union shop. Under the penalty clause, a miner forfeits to the employer a dollar every day he is out on an unauthorized strike. If the employer fails to deduct the fine, he must pay a double penalty to the union. The miners under union-shop contracts who struck in sympathy last week probably are technically liable to these fines, and the employers likewise liable if they do not deduct the fines. Some employers have hinted that they are willing to forget the incident. The sympathy strikes indicated, however, that the penalty clause is of limited value.

The heads of several steel companies are understood to have agreed informally among themselves last spring to accept the union shop in their coal mines. There were dissenters, chief of whom was Eugene Grace, of Bethlehem. Others did not want to sign for the union shop unless all captive mines did. In the end, only three steel companies signed union shop contracts with the United Mine Workers.

BENJAMIN FAIRLESS, of U. S. Steel, is reported to have been inclined toward acceptance of the union shop in the mines last spring. Dr. John R. Steelman, head of the United States Conciliation Service, is the conciliator who persuaded the commercial mines to take the union shop. With himself added, Lewis could hardly hope for a more favorable tribunal.

But the real stake in the controversy is not the captive mines, but the steel plants. The precedent seems all-important to both parties. The solution, therefore, favored by some of the Government was to grant the union shop in the captive mines but to accompany it with an agreement by the national leaders of labor that there should be no more strikes for the closed shop during the defense period. This could be followed by legislation. The Defense Mediation Board felt that the Government should not impose the union shop, but in effect urged the employers to accept it voluntarily.

The strike was unnecessary just because the union was secure in the captive mines. If Lewis gets the union shop, or something near to it, but the door is closed against further strikes for a similar objective, he will have won the battle but lost, if not the war, at least for the duration of the war.

REGARDLESS of the Arbitration Board's decision, legislation establishing a labor policy for the war period is now almost certain. The fight will be over its content. The Administration wishes so far as possible to avoid compulsion. For its higher aim is to obtain the maximum contribution from labor, as well as from other groups, to the defense effort. This can be achieved only when labor is recognized as a partner.

The policy must be such, therefore, as to command the general approval of labor, and compulsion must be reserved for obstreperous minorities. Beyond that, however, labor must be accorded an important place in the planning and direction of the defense effort. That was what the President had in mind when he made Sidney Hillman associate director-general of OPM. Owing to short-sightedness in both industry and labor, the policy of collaboration has not made satisfactory headway. The Administration is looking around for means of reinforcing it.

Fair Enough

By Westbrook Pegler

Between Two Unions

THE FOLLOWING LETTER from an American woman is a fair example of the desperate protests which I have been receiving for several years from victims of union goons:

"Our family," says this woman, "is caught in a web of union intrigue. I doubt whether even you are aware of the horrible deeds that take place.

"My husband and I own a small grocery. It was opened in 1935 as a boulevard stand, where we sold ice cream and candy to children and pop to truck drivers. Later we added a few groceries, and last year we mortgaged our home to start a modern meat department.

"THIS ACCOMPLISHMENT was attained through hard work, long hours and little or no home life. My two boys helped after school, and when the oldest won a scholarship for college he gave that up, hoping to continue as a business owner some day.

In 1937, when the employes of the Blank Manufacturing Co., nearby, voted to affiliate with the C. I. O., some of the employes who were our main support as regular customers influenced us to hang up a C. I. O. card as a good-will gesture. We hung it up even though we had no outside employes, and my son paid $1.50 per month dues for years.

"In time we hired one employe, then another, who joined the C. I. O. The ax fell when we opened the butcher shop under the C. I. O. banner. The A. F. L. union picketed us, demanding that we fire our butcher and hire an A. F. L. man. After terrific pleading with the C. I. O. I got permission to place an A. F. L. card in the meat shop. Then the A. F. L. union refused to take off their pickets unless the whole store went A. F. L. The C. I. O. refused, so for four months the two unions made our place a battleground.

"OUR FAMILY went through hell. Being in an isolated spot, where only vehicle traffic passes, the pickets could commit every kind of dastardly act of torment. They threw two stench bombs, shattering the windows, strewing glass and mayonnaise all over. One bomb missed my husband by a hair. In fact, some of the glass cut him. They intimidated and boycotted us day and night. They frightened jobbers into taking their merchandise off our shelves. We had to travel hundreds of miles daily to get supplies. Meat, 60 miles round trip. Milk, 20 miles, etc. Business fell from $150 a day to $16. We lost hundreds of dollars' worth of perishable merchandise, meats, vegetables, cheese, etc.

"They would picket on horseback, lead dogs, carry radios. They threw carpet tacks and roofing nails on our place and in the public roads. They threw two rocks through our living room window, endangering the life of my husband's elderly mother. They spread human excrement in our driveway so we would step in it. They terrorized personal friends, following them for miles. They sandbagged one friend and while one man held him another kicked him in the face, breaking his jaw. Several people could have identified the thugs? But would they? We traced the car to the central labor headquarters. It was registered in the organization's name. The cops said their hands were tied.

"It got so nobody would deliver anything, such as laundry, to our home. The boycott persecuted our family in their pursuits as private citizens. Finally our pleas struck a note in our appeal that our employes were C. I. O., and that we had a closed shop, C. I. O. Then the court issued the relief that where a closed shop exists another union cannot molest the employes, so we have an injunction against pickets, but that does not prevent the boycott through union periodicals or spreading nails on our premises to give us endless trouble. The C. I. O. will not give relief. They say any help given would be aiding an employer.

"WITH YEARS of work already lost, and heavy debts, what is to become of an American family which finds itself in the predicament of being between two unions? How did this country ever get into such a mess? All principles of right are forgotten.

"When unions are given the right to picket or boycott for any reason other than actual labor dispute by the employes involved, this country's assertions of freedom for all and the right to pursue one's happiness becomes the biggest mockery of the age."

This American mother owes these vicious persecutions to President Roosevelt, who includes the right to commit such atrocities among "labor's gains," and to the Congress of the United States, which has lacked the patriotic manhood to protect innocent citizens from such wanton torment.

Congressional Trend

By Mark Sullivan

Leaders Act As Presidential Agents

A USEFUL and courageous citizen, Mr. Westbrook Pegler, indicts Congress bitterly. Many feel as he does, though perhaps with less violence. Others feel vaguely disturbed, feel that something menacing hangs over us. The condition goes to the heart of one of the great issues in the world today. The issue is whether parliamentary government can survive, in the United States or in the world. Whether we can continue to have government by laws, arrived at through the processes of debate and written by a legislative body elected by the people and representing the 435 Congressional districts of the country—or, on the contrary, must accept a system of government by one man and the subordinates he appoints.

Decidedly, the question cries for public attention. I quote part of Mr. Pegler's indictment, which he puts in the form of an address to Congress:

"You are collectively just now, and have been for the last eight years and more, a sorry counterfeit of a legislative body in a republic. . . . You have impaired, and damn near destroyed, your own prestige and, with it, the American form of government, which understands that the national Legislature has a solemn duty to enact our laws, subject to no man's permission or forbiddance. You have quit cold under political threats from the White House and turned the legislative function over to the President. . . ."

MR. PEGLER cites the present demand for legislation about strikes and correction of abuses in organized labor. About the prospect of such legislation, Mr. Pegler says to Congress: "You have been saying yourselves that it is impossible to pass any laws . . . because the President won't let you . . . The President won't let you, and you not only stand for that, but have the gall to offer that excuse to the people. You can't even realize that this admission cancels your status as a Legislature." Scornfully Mr. Pegler sums up: 'The President won't let you . . . You are afraid the President will get sore . . . The President does not give his permission."

What Mr. Pegler says is justified exhortation. After that, what is needed is diagnosis. Diagnosis cannot be simple, for the condition has several causes. One cause can be made clear by recalling another attempt at labor legislation made by Congress last year.

ON JUNE 7, 1940, amendments to the Labor Relations Act were passed by the House by a vote of 258 to 129, practically 2 to 1. During the months when the House was debating and passing that labor legislation, every member (except the few retiring voluntarily) was before the people for renewal of his seat. The party primaries for renomination were being held, and the general election was five months ahead, in November. That the House was willing to pass controversial labor legislation in those circumstances is proof that the House would be willing now.

The amendments to the Labor Act did not become law—because they were never brought to a vote in the Senate. Common judgment at the time felt that had the Senate acted, the amendments would have passed that body by a majority comparable to the one in the House.

When we inquire why the Senate did not act, it is not possible to say, upon any record of exact facts, just what person or group was responsible. But common judgment would say this much: If the Senate leader, Mr. Barkley, of Kentucky, had wished those amendments laid before the Senate for action it would have been done. And common judgment would say further that Mr. Barkley's attitude about legislation in general usually coincided with the attitude of the President.

THE POST of Senate leader is at all times important. He is selected by a caucus of whichever party is dominant, and confirmed by the Senate as a whole. He is supposed to be the Senate's spokesman, to reflect the Senate's attitude, to be in his person an embodiment of the Senate's sentiment, to act as the Senate's agent. The same is true of the Speaker and leader in the House.

But there has grown up during several years past a situation in which the leaders in both houses have become, not agents of their respective bodies, but rather representatives of the White House. The relation has become, not one in which leaders tell the President what legislation Congress wants—but tell Congress what the President wants.

This might be comparatively harmless in normal times, even though it passes far beyond ordinary and desirable cooperation between the legislative and executive branches of government. But it is different when one of the great issues in the United States and in the world is preservation of the vitality of the legislative branch of government—and when the public gets such an impression as Mr. Pegler reflects.

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips

Private Purkey

Dear Ma:

I wish you wood look up all you can find out about a place called Dutch Guiana and let me know what you find out on account of I have got the news here that troops is being sent there and I wood like to know all about it just in case.

I remember hearing it mentioned in geografy lessons, but all I recall exactly is that it was a pink spot on a map which showed territory away off the main automobile routes. I have a gasoline station map here but there is no Dutch Guiana shown on it.

I thought it was situated between Miami and the Panama Canal and was the place where Panama Hattie took place, but Sergt. Mooney says it is in South America between Mexico and Luis Firpo. I do not think I will get leased to Guiana becuz I am all equipped with winter clothes like I wood be leased to Iceland if anybody, but you never can tell in a war like this. All they wood have to do to switch me to Dutch Guiana wood be to order me back into light underwear and take away my snowshoes.

Sergt. Mooney says we are taking over this place for the Netherlands, whoever they are. They sound like a song and dance team. He says they own the joint but are busy elsewhere. He says it is rich in boxkite mines witch is the first time I ever knew you got boxkites from mines, but so many crazy things are happening today I wood not put up no argument on anything.

All I hope is I do not get lent to Guiana and Iceland at the same time and have to do shuttle duty as it is no overnight Pullman hop. Whatever become of that pledge about no soldiers being sent to forrin soil. Iceland as I said before is just forrin ice and maybe Guiana is just forrin boxkite mines with no soil to speak of, but anyhow I am puzzled.

One of the papers says it is opposite Dakar witch is that African place witch is in the news so much as a storm center and the place witch Hitler may be going to use for takeoffs. It all goes to show that we are getting closer to the fighting front every day and I am very nervous. Every time I hear a bugle blown today I think maybe it is the official notice we are in the thick of the fighting.

I hear that Brazil is behind us in occupying this Dutch place and I hope she is not too far behind. One of the boys who was in Brazil four years ago says even then it was so lousy with Nazis that he thought Hitler had leased the whole place. I do not trust them Brazilians. What I mean is I think some of them have Nazi ideas. Of course I do not want to say that of all of them as some of my best friends are Brazilians I guess.

Anyhow let me know all the dope on this new spot witch is to be protected by me maybe and do not worry as everything will come out all right I hope. Your loving son, OSCAR.

Society Note

Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Twitchell attended the opening of the New York opera season at the Metropolitan, though ignored by the papers. Mr. Twitchell wore his 1887 buffalo coat (reconditioned) over a plain sack suit with diamonds. Mrs. Twitchell wore a bicycle costume and buckskin vest.

Correction

It may be Surinam to you—
I ain't prepared to say—
It's Dutch Guiana still to me
And always was that way.

I well remember those pink spots
On school-day maps with pride,
But I never heard of Surinam—
And I'm more than satisfied.

Near A Showdown

By Barnet Nover

Twilight Of The Kurusu Mission

THE NEWS that has reached Washington regarding the large-scale reinforcement of Japanese garrisons in Indo-China during the last few days throws a revealing light on the so-called peace mission of Saburo Kurusu.

NOVER

Mr. Kurusu's ostensible purpose in coming to Washington was to explore the possibility of restoring good relations between Japan and the United States and in that way prevent the threatened explosion in the Pacific. The once abundant store of good will toward the island empire which had existed in this country had been used up as Japan committed one act of aggression after another. Little is left of Japanese-American amity except the negative circumstance that both this country and Japan prefer not to go to war if war can be avoided.

THE JAPANESE have for a long time sought to capitalize American peace-mindedness. Mr. Kurusu was only the latest to make the attempt. Yet at the time of his arrival Tokyo could have been under no illusion regarding this country's attitude.

It is hard to take seriously the belief that Japan hoped, through Mr. Kurusu, to bully the United States into acceptance of the Nipponese "new order" in east Asia. The real purpose was quite different and it has now been revealed in the news from Indo-China. The real purpose was to gain time needed by Japan to enable her to strike out with fullest force the moment when such action seemed most propitious.

It has been assumed in some quarters here that any development which resulted in a postponement of a showdown in the Far East worked automatically to the advantage of the United States and the other nations of the anti-aggression bloc. In this connection it has been pointed out that the trade embargo is slowly but steadily strangling Japan; that the British garrisons at Singapore, Hongkong, Burma and other key points in southeastern Asia are being reinforced; that American defense production is now getting into its stride; that if we add all these things together we can only conclude that given time and Japan would be placed at a fearful disadvantage in waging war against the ABCD powers.

That argument is not without its validity. But everything depends on whether the present state of affairs in the Pacific could indefinitely be maintained. The circumstance had also to be taken into account that Japan was not ready last month, or last summer, to resume her march of aggression.

She, too, needed time—time to strengthen her garrisons in Indo-China, accumulate sufficient quantities of tanks, planes, munitions and other supplies at key points in the erstwhile French colony; time to speed up the mobilization of her man power and waning resources. Moreover, with the German-Russian struggle unliquidated and with Vichy's role still equivocal Japan had more to gain by waiting than by acting.

WITH THE RAPID reinforcement of the Japanese garrisons in Indo-China any doubt that the Kurusu mission was designed to throw dust in the eyes of Uncle Sam should be resolved. The dispatch of troops, planes, tanks, munitions to Indo-China while the Kurusu mission was in Washington is a cynical act of bad faith on the part of the Tokyo government. But in view of Japan's record it is doubtful if any responsible official in Washington has been fooled by that mission.

The point is that Japan has simply been acting in character. Like Hitler, the Japanese use peace offensives as instruments for the achievement of aims which, if the peace offensive fails, they have every intention of seeking to achieve by war. The Japanese government can no more be trusted than Hitler can be trusted. Their records are similar, their objectives are parallel and their methods are the same.

THE LARGE force which they have surreptitiously assembled in Indo-China (even while Mr. Kurusu was talking peace in Washington) makes it possible for the Japanese, should they judge the occasion propitious, to move in one of several directions.

They may move against British Malaya, thus attacking Singapore from the rear. This, however, is the least likely possibility, since the British have assembled a large and powerful force at Singapore capable of striking back effectively against any invaders.

A second possibility is a thrust through the Chinese province of Yunnan, which lies to the north of Indo-China. The object of such a drive would be Kunming, whose loss by the Chinese would place Chungking, the Burma Road and the main Chinese armies in grave peril.

A third possibility is a Japanese attack on Thailand, the ultimate purpose of which would be an attempt to cut the Burma Road by a drive across Thailand to Burma.

ON WEDNESDAY, Secretary Hull made it clear to Mr. Kurusu and Admiral Komura that any agreement between this country and Japan must rest four-square on basic principles repeatedly expounded by this Administration as the indispensable attributes of any decent international order. This was all to the good.

The question may be asked whether the time has not arrived to go further, whether Japan should not now be placed on notice that any further aggression by her anywhere in the Far East would meet with the active opposition of the United States.

It is because we have for so long been on the defensive that Japan has been able to go forward on the path of aggression and retain the initiative in the military sphere. That has been of enormous advantage to her. If Japan is now to be stopped in her tracks the initiative must be taken by the nations she openly has proclaimed as her enemies.

2 More Executions In France Reveal Renewal Of Sabotage

Copyright by New York Times

Vichy, France, Nov. 27.—Two executions were announced in the occupied zone today of persons arrested in Nancy for illegal possession of arms. For some weeks there had been no executions for this violation, although in October such announcements were made almost daily.

Meanwhile there have been new incidents in Paris and another unsuccessful attempt to blow up a power station at Arras has been reported, in addition to railway sabotage and explosions in Paris restaurants.

As a result of dynamitings and other acts of sabotage in the occupied zone, the Latin Quarter of Paris is under limited curfew restrictions for three days, the city of Paris has been fined a million francs and there has been another roundup of Jews in the eleventh ward. The people have been warned by the German military governor of the "grave consequences which new aggressions may have, especially if, for instance, a German soldier should be killed."

Moderate by Comparison

In comparison with repressive measures taken after the shootings at Nantes and Bordeaux, when 98 hostages were killed, these measures are notable for their moderation and are perhaps adapted to the state of negotiations between the French and Reich governments.

The warning to Paris again ascribes the incidents to powers hostile to Germany and urges the French to prevent the crimes and aid in capturing the saboteurs.

The acts of violence punished today date back several days and were only made public by the measures of reprisal. No German victims are believed to have been involved.

The notice mentions the bombing of a restaurant requisitioned by the German military and dynamitings against property and establishments belonging to the German military service. A Vichy report also involves a library in the Boulevard Saint Michel which was a propaganda center for French collaboration.

It is also reported there was an attempt to wreck a train at Abbeville, the second in two weeks. A locomotive was derailed.

Deat Assails Petain For Talking to Americans

Vichy, Unoccupied France, Nov. 27 (AP).—Marcel Deat, outstanding advocate of full French collaboration with Germany, today bitterly criticized the Vichy regime's failure to adhere to the anti-Comintern pact and condemned Marshal Petain's action yesterday in receiving American visitors.

The marshal discussed France's food situation with Howard F. Kerschner, director in France for the American Friends service committee.

Deat, breaking the silence of the German-controlled Paris press on the subject, lashed out in a newspaper article at Vichy for not seizing the opportunity of Tuesday's ceremonial signing of the pact in Berlin to accept formally Germany's leadership in Europe.

Concerning Petain's American contacts, Deat demanded that Vichy "take sides against all enemies of Europe, including the English and eventually the Americans."

The Gallup Poll

Majority Think Prices Will Go Up But Only 1 in 6 Is Hoarding Goods

By Dr. George Gallup

Director, American Institute of Public Opinion

Princeton, N. J., Nov. 27.—As the House of Representatives wrestles this week with a price control bill to curb inflation, one question of special interest to students of economics is this: how many people throughout the country are laying in goods now to protect themselves against higher prices later on?

The history of previous inflations shows that fear of rising prices often causes a rush to buy goods, and that this rush, in turn, tends to drive prices up, starting the spiral of inflation.

To find the facts concerning the situation today the institute has conducted a nation-wide survey whose results point to two main facts:

First, more than 8 in every 10 persons polled believe that prices on most products they buy will be higher six months from now, but, second, only a small percentage of them—about one person in every six—has up to this time laid in any goods or products as a protection against rising prices. Those who have laid in supplies have bought chiefly nonperishable food products, especially canned goods.

83 Per Cent Expect Rise

Several aspects of the price issue were covered in a series of questions as follows:

"Do you think prices on most products you buy will be higher, lower, or about the same six months from now?"

Higher	83%
Lower	1
Same	10
Don't Know	6

Those who said "higher" were asked about how much higher they thought prices would go in the next six months. The median average of all replies was 10 per cent. If the views of the group with no opinion on this issue are taken into account, the median average would be slightly less than 10 per cent.

How Many Have Bought?

The next question in the survey was:

"Have you laid in any goods or products in order to protect yourself against higher prices later on?"

Those who thought prices were going higher replied as follows to this question:

Yes	18%
No	82

The 18 per cent who answered affirmatively were then asked, in the final question of the survey: "What things have you bought?"

The list of products ranged all the way from canned milk to automobiles.

In order of mention the products named were: Nonperishable foods, particularly canned food, and also sugar, salt, tea, etc.; clothing; home furnishings, including furniture, radios, refrigerators; automobiles; heating fuel; soap and cosmetics; and miscellaneous, including liquor, tires, electrical appliances, and, in farm areas, fertilizer, seed and grain.

While there is no telling what may happen in the next few months if prices continue upward, nevertheless there seems to be little evidence of any extensive buying for hoarding purposes at the present time.

Such buying of this nature which does exist is not confined to the upper income groups, the poll finds. Many in the lower income group reported that they were buying fresh fruit and vegetables for the purpose of canning, as a protection against higher food prices in the future.

The proportion of persons by income groups who say they have laid in supplies is as follows: upper income group, 20 per cent; middle income group, 22 per cent; lower income group, 14 per cent.

Bazaar to Benefit Serbs in Prisons

PLAN YUGOSLAV BAZAAR—Georges Henri Martin, assistant to the representative of the International Red Cross in this country, and Mrs. Howell Moorehead, committee member, go over plans for the Yugoslav bazaar to be held Monday through December 6 at the British War Relief Office, 1217 Connecticut Avenue. Beneficiaries will be Yugoslavs in Axis prison camps

Yugoslavs Need Help Quickly, Says Red Cross Aide

Washington will dig into its pocket next week to provide packages of Christmas cheer for those "forgotten men" when nations fight—prisoners of war.

The beneficiaries will be Yugoslavs in prison camps in Germany and Italy. For them a Yugoslav bazaar will be held Monday through December 6 at the British war relief office, 1217 Connecticut Avenue Northwest. It is sponsored by a committee organized by Mme. Constantin Fotitch, wife of the Yugoslav Minister. Money will be turned over to the Red Cross for purchase of the goods.

Many Yugoslav prisoners in Axis camps are in "complete destitution," Georges Henri Martin, assistant to the representative of the International Red Cross in this country, said here yesterday.

"They need quick help," he said. "The outlook for them will be very dark unless they get it."

Observers pointed out that the position of the Yugoslav prisoner is made particularly hazardous by the fact that there are no German prisoners in Yugoslavia, so that the German government need not fear retaliation for any hardship the Yugoslav prisoners might suffer.

Martin says the Red Cross has worked out a gilt-edged system for seeing that the food ends up in Yugoslav stomachs and the clothes on Yugoslav backs.

The system, briefly, is this: the goods are carried by the American Red Cross to Lisbon, where the International Red Cross takes over, and transports the goods, which are guaranteed safe passage by all belligerents, to Geneva. From there they are shipped to the Yugoslavs' elected representative in the camp. This man, a Yugoslav, distributes the food and clothing.

Safety Leader Got His Start With an Unpleasant Picture

By Gladwin Hill.
Associated Press Staff Writer

Chicago.—William H. Cameron, as mild a person as you'd care to meet, got started on his career by tacking a human arm and leg onto a wall, photographing them, and then running around scaring people with the picture.

Hardly a genteel pastime, but to Cameron's grisly enterprise millions of workers in American industry owe thanks for their well-being, if not their lives.

Cameron was at that time a minor executive of the American Steel Foundries, and his stunt was an overture to a national campaign for industrial and public safety which to date is reckoned to have saved some 285,000 lives.

The work of Cameron and a half-dozen other men aroused over the needless sacrifice of limb and life in accidents led to the formation of the National Safety Council, the hub of safety work in the United States and the organization President Roosevelt recently designated to supercharge safety activities to aid the national defense program.

The council, a nonprofit organization supported by industries, insurance companies and community safety agencies, is the chief clearing house of safety information and counsel.

Cameron was its first managing director, starting in 1914 with two stenographers in a one-room office and a budget of $1400, and still is its director today, when it has 135 employes, occupies most of a floor in the big Chicago Civic Opera Building and operates on a budget of a million dollars a year.

You might expect a safety leader to be a shrinking, hypercautious kill-joy, but Cameron is nothing of the sort. Sixty-four years old, dapper and brisk, with a slight build, a thin crest of gray hair, and bright, shrewd eyes, he is so dynamic that he can't express himself fast enough, and his words pile up on each other.

Cameron leads a high-pressure life that probably would be hazardout to anyone with less stamina, balance and sense of safety.

He travels everywhere he can by plane, after flying to distant cities to speak at night, and being back at his desk at 8 the next morning, his customary starting hour.

The exhilaration he derives from this pace he sometimes shares with the council staff by posting on the office bulletin board messages like this:

"Worked all day yesterday. Six o'clock, flew to St. Louis. Eight o'clock, addressed banquet. Eleven o'clock, flew back to Chicago. In the office again at 8. What a wonderful world we live in! W. H. Cameron."

Jobless Parolee Seeks Cell Again, Gets Work Instead

Chattanooga, Tenn., Nov. 27 (AP).—Lawrence Galloway Thompson went to work in a foundry. But that's just part of the story.

Not so long ago, Thompson was paroled from Atlanta Federal Penitentiary where he served time for sending a threatening letter to a Jackson, Miss., attorney.

Sunday night he appeared at county jail. He said he could not live up to terms of his parole since he could not find work. He asked that he be returned to prison.

County Detective C. H. Dempsey heard the man's story. He found him a job.

Last Year's War Warms Up Again

Black Arrows Show British and Axis Thrusts. White Arrows Show Possible Axis Moves

In the erratic war on North African sands Axis and British armies have taken turns chasing each other:

1. Amid fanfare, Italian Gen. Graziani's legions pushed off toward Suez in September, 1940, after the scorching summer sun had cooled sufficiently for his soldiers to hold their rifle barrels. The troops bogged down at Sidi Barrani, Egypt.

2. Then British Gen. Wavell pulled his spectacular counter-push and sent the Italians hot-footing back several hundred miles into Libya, far past Bengasi to El Agheila.

3. So completely did the Italians seem to be crushed that Britain transferred many of her desert fighters to the Battle of Greece last spring. Meanwhile the Germans were slipping thousands of troops across the Mediterranean. They attacked, sent the few Britons hustling back toward Egypt. A garrison of British Empire troops managed to hang on to encircled Tobruk.

4. Came summer of 1941 and another truce. Recently as the sands began cooling, both sides showed signs of feverish preparations for something. Britons struck first last week, sped 80 miles to the Tobruk region where they eased the pressure on their beleaguered colleagues.

One obvious motive for the British move is to strengthen her hold on her lifeline across the Mediterranean. Another possible reason is that Gen. Weygand's "resignation" from the French North African command may foreshadow a German move to take over control of French colonies. A British drive to French North Africa might head off such a move.

Still another possible explanation is that Britain fears Germany may try to crash down through the Near East from the Caucasus to Suez this winter. By the current move the British are trying to make sure that Adolf Hitler won't be able to work his famous squeeze technique on Suez by launching a simultaneous drive from Libya.

Correspondents in Kuibyshev Face Many Obstacles

By Walter Kerr

Kuibyshev.—Since their departure from Moscow in the middle of last month, foreign correspondents here have been working under extraordinary conditions which all of them hope will be only temporary.

Situated 600 miles from Moscow, 550 miles from Tula and 650 miles from Rostov, the principal sources of news for the correspondents here are the Moscow and London radios, Moscow newspapers and semi-weekly press conferences with Solomon Lozovsky, bearded assistant director of the Soviet Information Bureau and vice commissar of foreign affairs. An added handicap is the delay in cable transmission, although this condition is improving.

As a result of the situation it is difficult for a correspondent to obtain an accurate picture of the battle front and file a story in time to overcome cable delays. News filed here often arrives in New York several days after it has been picked up from the Moscow radio.

Catholics Plan To Honor Pope

Copyright by New York Times

Rome.—An invitation to all Catholics to give offerings for the erection of a church in Rome to the memory of Pope St. Eugene I has been issued in the Osservatore Romano. The newspaper points out that this will be one way in which to manifest the gratitude of Catholics to Pope Pius XII, whose Christian name is also Eugene, and suggests that offers may be given on May 13, 1942, which day marks the twenty-fifth anniversary of Pius XII's Episcopal consecration.

A committee under the patronage of Cardinal Gennaro Granito Pignatelli di Belmonte and with Cardinal Francesco Marchetti-Selvaggiani as head has been formed in Rome. Its task will be that of organizing national committees which will supervise the celebrations to be held on May 13 throughout the Catholic world.

In Rome the celebration will be devoid of the pomp and solemnity of former years, the Osservatore says, in view of "the gravity of the times." The Pope himself, it explains, has decided that no pilgrimages or external manifestations shall be held. The pontiff, it announces, will celebrate the day by officiating at mass in St. Peter's.

'41 Income Tax Is Not Likely To Be Raised

By Nicholas P. Gregory
Copyright by New York Tribune, Inc.

Henry Morgenthau, jr., Secretary of the Treasury, announced at his press conference yesterday that the Treasury does not intend to suggest to Congress any changes in the capital gain and loss taxes as affecting transactions during 1941.

"Neither do we intend to suggest to the Congress any further taxes on income earned during the calendar year 1941," he added. The statement was made in view of the large number of inquiries which the Treasury had received on impending changes in the capital gain and loss taxes and the possibility of taxing earned income derived in 1941.

The Secretary again declined to disclose the types of taxes which the Treasury is going to ask Congress to include in the new bill expected early next year. At the same time, he refused to indorse or denounce directly the tax proposals offered by Marriner S. Eccles, chairman of the Federal Reserve Board.

Speaking on Tuesday before the National Industrial Conference Board, Eccles asserted any new tax program must tap "the long purses first and heaviest." The Secretary said he had not read Eccles' remarks and had not received a copy of the text.

The Treasury, it was reported, recently had asked the House Ways and Means Committee to consider a withholding tax of 15 per cent as a means of "mopping up" the so-called surplus consumer purchasing power. Committee members, it is stated, balked, pointing out that it was politically inexpedient in view of the 1942 Congressional elections. The Treasury had also proposed stiffer Social Security taxes as a method of enforced savings.

Chairman Eccles' remark fell like a bombshell on these proposals and it was forecast yesterday that the Treasury would be forced not only to abandon its withholding tax idea, but to ask for stiffer corporate taxes and stiffer levies on incomes in the higher brackets.

Regarding the differences which have cropped up over policy between Eccles and the Secretary, he pointed out that he was "not looking for troubles."

"I try to pull the same stroke in Mr. Roosevelt's boat and I just try to make as little trouble for anybody as possible," he said. "Those of you who have been around here as long as I have know that it is difficult to get everybody rowing to the stroke that the coxswain calls."

USO Will Open Two Soldiers' Clubs Today

After several months of delay, the USO program of recreation centers for soldiers today enters the dedication stage with the opening at noon in Fayetteville, N. C., of the first two clubhouses erected by the Quartermaster Corps.

The structures, it was announced from USO headquarters in New York, are the forerunners of more than 200 others now under construction in communities near Army camps and Navy bases.

One of the Fayetteville buildings will be occupied jointly by the Jewish Welfare Board and the Young Men's Christian Association, and the other by the Y. M. C. A. alone. A third clubhouse nearing completion in Fayetteville will be occupied jointly by the National Catholic Community Service and the Y. M. C. A.

Entertainment for more than 60,000 soldiers stationed at Fort Bragg will be furnished at the centers.

In the meantime a shift in emphasis of USO activities was announced in the Carolina maneuvers area.

USO field workers now are offering personal services direct to soldiers on the field. According to the announcement soldiers in action have been found to have needs "ranging from a piece of soap to facilities for sending money orders back home."

Vigil for Peace Opens at Epiphany Church Tonight

Led by Dr. E. Stanley Jones, Maryland-born, world-noted missionary to India, a 24-hour 7-day prayer vigil for peace, especially in the tense Pacific situation, will be initiated tonight at 10 o'clock at Epiphany Episcopal Church, 1317 G Street Northwest.

The vigil will be conducted under the auspices of the Washington Federation of Churches and the Washington Ministerial Union, and is the outgrowth of prayer groups. Dr. Jones has been conducting once weekly for several months here.

While The Post is not at liberty to reveal all the facts at present, it has been known for sometime that Dr. Jones has been slipping quietly into Washington once weekly to "feel out" foreign diplomats and representatives of the United States Government regarding peace.

According to Dr. Howard Stone Anderson, pastor of First Congregational Church and president of the Ministerial Union, a large number of churches and ministers have agreed to cooperate in the vigil.

Christmas Gift Cookies Should Be Easy to Pack

By Martha Ellyn
The Post Household Editor

UNCLE SAM'S injunction on a gay red, white and blue poster reads: "Shop and Mail Early for Delivery for Christmas." That is an admonition that needs heeding by those who are going to send Christmas cheer to the boys in the Army, Navy and Marines. So it's not too soon to be planning the things that are to be sent, with Christmas less than four weeks away.

Cookies are a food that will go through the mails in good condition. But they must be the right type of cookies, not the gooey, crumbly kind that look so heavenly when you have finished decorating them.

Martha Ellyn

There are certain things to consider in choosing recipes for cookies to be packed for mailing. The cookies must be of a type that will keep fresh in appearance and flavor for several days—perhaps longer, and of a size and shape that will not crumble easily.

However delicious the cookies may be in themselves, the following are points to be remembered when baking cookies which are to be mailed.

Square Cookies Easy to Pack

Cookies cut into squares or oblong shape are easiest to pack. They may be packed on edge in rows with waxed paper between each row.

Men hate tiny cookies (pink tea variety) so make them plenty big.

The type of container is important. A tin box with a closely fitting cover, preferably square or oblong, rather than round, packs to best advantage. This serves as a protection from the air enroute and after the cookies arrive at their destination. These boxes may be bought at the ten cent store.

A generous amount of wax paper should be used in packing to insure unbroken cookies. (I know a girl who made coconut kisses to mail to her soldier beau, and she wrapped them in cotton.) Cut the wax paper into shreds and spread as a cushion in the bottom of the box. Cut pieces of wax paper to fit the bottom and sides leaving enough to fold over the top of box after it is filled. Place several sheets of wax paper between the layers of cookies in the box.

Wrap the cookie box in cardboard before the wrapping paper is put on, and there will be further assurance that the package will arrive at its destination in good condition.

Pay Attention To Flavor Preference

And the flavor preferences of the boys should be considered too. If you know George likes chocolate but abhors coconut, then by all means send chocolate-flavored cookies. If it is pecans and not black walnuts that are a favorite of your soldier boy, remember that too. Don't flavor the cookies with lemon when your Freddie is one who always says, "I'll take vanilla." If it is ginger that is a pet food peeve, then remember that there are other spices—cloves, cinnamon, nutmeg and lots of other "pep" flavors.

There's scarcely a home, office or any kind of group that does not have some member of their family away from home in the service. This I found out when I polled my own immediate co-workers asking them if they sent goodies to anyone in the services. That there is a variance in the types of cookies preferred is shown in the following findings:

Marcellus Hughes, Officer's Candidate School, Fort Knox, Kentucky, is one who "goes for" fudgies. This is a cookie that can be packed with a certainty and here is the recipe by which Mrs. Hughes makes the fudgies.

Fudgies—Cream ¼ cup shortening, 1 cup sugar and 1 teaspoon vanilla together until light and fluffy. Add 1 egg and beat well. Blend in 2 squares of melted chocolate. Sift together 2 cups sifted soft wheat flour, ½ teaspoon soda and ½ teaspoon salt. Add the flour to creamed mixture alternately with ¾ cup buttermilk. Add ¾ cup chopped nuts. Drop by teaspoonfuls on greased cookie sheets. Bake in moderate oven, 350 degrees, for 10 to 15 minutes. Yield—4 dozen 2-inch cookies.

Here's a Recipe For Chewy Type

Buck Reynolds, a lieutenant in Camp Polk, in Louisiana, according to his sister, likes the chewy type of cookies. He especially likes the kind made of corn flakes and flavored with orange. The following is the recipe by which these cookies are made:

Orange Corn Flake Chews—Combine 1 1-3 cups condensed milk, 1 tablespoon grated orange rind, 1 tablespoon orange juice and 3½ cups corn flakes which have been crushed into coarse crumbs. Add 1 1-3 cups coconut and ¼ teaspoon salt. Allow to stand about 3 minutes. Drop by teaspoons on lightly greased baking sheet and bake in moderate oven, 350 degrees, for 15 minutes. Remove at once from baking sheet. Yield: 40 cookies, 1½ inches in diameter.

Reginald Grady, Quartermaster's Training School, Camp Lee, Virginia, receives cookies from his sister that are made from rolled oats. They are named Scottish Fancies. Here is the recipe by which Reg's sister makes the cookies:

Scottish Fancies—Beat 1 egg until light and add ½ cup sugar gradually. Stir in 2-3 cup melted butter, 1 cup uncooked rolled oats, 1-3 teaspoon salt and ¼ teaspoon vanilla. Drop by teaspoonfuls onto thoroughly greased cooky sheet, 1½ inches apart. Spread into circular shape with a fork dipped in cold water. Bake in moderately slow oven, 325 degrees, until delicately browned. After baking, these cookies may be rolled over handle of wooden spoon, while still warm. Makes 36 cookies.

Yum! Yum! Chocolate Whirls! Oh! Boy!

Sam E. Waddle, heavy weapons detachment, Fort Benning, Georgia, has been receiving molasses cookies and chocolate whirls from his cousin Margaret. She says that her cousin has reported that both of these cookies have come through to him in the mail in first class condition. Following are the recipes for making these cookies:

Chocolate Whirls—Cream ½ cup shortening and ½ cup sugar together. Add 1 egg yolk and mix well. Sift 1½ cups sifted flour with 1 teaspoon baking powder and ¼ teaspoon salt. Add to creamed mixture alternately with 3 tablespoons milk. Divide the mixture into two parts. To one part add 1 square melted chocolate. Chill. Roll the white dough into a thin rectangular sheet. Roll the chocolate dough into a rectangular sheet slightly shorter than the white. Place the chocolate dough over the white and roll jelly roll fashion. Wrap in wax paper and chill thoroughly. Slice thin and bake on ungreased baking sheet in moderately hot oven, 400 degrees, about 12 minutes. Yield, about 3 dozen cookies.

Molasses Cookies—Cream ½ cup shortening and ½ cup sugar together. Add 1 cup molasses, 1 egg and mix well. Sift together 3½ cups sifted flour, ½ teaspoon salt, 1 tablespoon ginger, 1 teaspoon cinnamon. Add to the creamed mixture alternately with ½ cup boiling water and 1 tablespoon vinegar. Form into rolls and chill thoroughly. Slice about ¼ inch thick. Crease with blade of a knife. Bake on greased baking sheet about 10 minutes in moderate oven, 375 degrees.

I have a soldier-cousin, too. He likes fig cookie strips. This cookie packs well, is easy to make, healthful and tastes grand. The recipe for this cookie is as follows:

Fig Cookie Strips—Rinse and drain 1 cup dried figs, clip stems and put figs through food chopper, using a medium knife. Cream together 1½ cups granulated sugar and ½ cup butter, and add 3 well beaten eggs and the figs. Mix thoroughly. Add 2 cups sifted all-purpose flour, sifted with ½ teaspoon salt and ½ teaspoon soda. Add 1 teaspoon lemon extract and beat well. Drop by teaspoonfuls onto greased cookie sheet and bake in moderately hot oven, 400 degrees, 7 to 10 minutes, or spread in thin layer on greased cookie sheet. Bake in a moderately hot oven, 400 degrees, 15 to 18 minutes. Cut into strips. Sufficient to fill a cookie sheet 14 by 10 by ½ inches.

P. S. I've heard that Army regulations do not permit food being stored in the men's quarters, so don't send them in too large consignments. But no doubt the "share and share alike" spirit prevails so a box of cookies will not last too long.

Holiday Cookies For the Boys In Camp

Pictured below are six different ways to dramatize Yuletide packages and give them a personal touch. Christmas patterns in printed wrappings, bright ribbon and honeycomb bells, vary the traditional greeting and are easily applied to the boxes

Chocolate and molasses cookies take on new whirls and shapes when baked as the ones shown in the picture above. This is the way Mrs. Clara Gebhardt Snyder, director of foods and nutrition, Wheat Flour Institute, suggests baking them for Christmas.

Festive Element Given to Meals With Oysters Dishes

Oysters are well deserving of the title, "treat of the sea." Wherever and however served, there are cheers for oysters.

Thus with oysters on the menu—you have a festive element in your meal. On the half shell, they'll be the appetizer; as oyster stew they are a main dish soup which should be followed with a substantial fruit dessert. And do serve oysters fried! The browning and crisping brought about in this process enhances their delicate flavor and makes them into an irrestible delicacy.

To make your fried oysters the best ever, coat them with fritter batter instead of the usual crumbs and egg and serve them with a well-flavored tomato sauce such as the one whole recipe is given below.

Fritter Oysters With Tomato Sauce—Prepare deep fat for frying by heating to the temperature at which an inch cube of bread browns in 60 seconds. Drain and dry between two towels, 1 pint (about 2 dozen) large oysters. Make a batter by beating 2 eggs, and adding 2-3 cup milk, 1 cup sifted flour and ½ teaspoon salt. Beat with rotary egg beater to make smooth. Dip oysters in batter, then place in wire basket and deep hot fat to fry until lightly browned. Drain on absorbent paper. Serve while hot with tomato sauce. Serves 6.

Tomato Sauce—Melt 2 tablespoons butter in a saucepan. Add, blending well, 3 tablespoons flour. Cook until bubbling. Add 1 medium can (2 cups) cream of tomato soup. Cook while stirring until thickened. Serve hot over fritter oysters.

Eat Grapefruit For Breakfast And Bed-Time

Florida's crop of grapefruit is now in the markets. And grapefruit are full of Vitmain C that is so necessary in our daily diet. That's no hardship because you can you drink your fresh grapefruit juice for breakfast and nod over a noggin of it at bedtime (it's a happy habit).

But there are ways of preparing the grapefruit in combination with other foods that makes it an appealing food. Try the following recipes while grapefruits are offered at such interesting price.

Individual Grapefruit Crisp—Cut 2 Florida grapefruits in half with a sharp knife, cutting around each section, but do not cut through the membrane. Cream 4 tablespoons butter thoroughly, add ½ cup sugar gradually creaming until light and fluffy. Add ¼ cup dry bread crumbs. Spread on top of each grapefruit half. Place on baking sheet and bake in a moderately hot oven, 400 degrees, for 25 minutes. Serve hot. Makes 4 servings.

Half-Shell Salad—Remove the core from grapefruit. With a sharp knife cut around inside edge of grapefruit as close to the shell as possible. Separate grapefruit segments from membrane. Cut out remainder of membrane and place a bed of romaine or escarole around inside of shell. Cut grapefruit segments into pieces and arrange on bed of salad greens. Serve with French dressing.

Beef and Pork Liver Found Equal of Calf's

TIME was when liver and bacon was considered a typical man's dish. Men liked this combination for real goodness' sake and they still do. Came a day when research workers made the important announcement that liver is a storehouse of needed ingredients for building blood. Iron and copper were found in liver in such form and amount as to place large servings of liver on a diet to prevent or cure anemia. It was then that we began ot realize liver and bacon was not just a man's dish. Now children, adolescents and grownups, too, are urged to include liver frequently in their meals.

And today, with vitamins a topic of general discussion, we find liver is one of the very rich sources of vitamin A and also the B vitamins—thiamine and riboflavin.

We can thus readily understand why dietitians and nutritionists would like to have liver served at least every other week.

But why always ask for calf or veal liver? Don't you know that great demand for any meat causes a lessening of supply and, therefore, higher prices? Why not use lamb liver? Just give it a try and you'll have a surprise. Cook the lamb liver like calf liver and neither you nor your family will ever know the difference.

In a test made with 3250 meat salesmen who know liver, lamb liver and bacon was served at breakfast meetings throughout the country. To the question: "How does the flavor and texture of the liver served at this breakfast compare with liver bought from retail stores in your neighborhood?" the answers were—37 per cent better; 48 per cent equal.

Almost none of these men guessed it was lamb liver—because there is no "lamb" flavor. From a health angle, lamb, pork and beef liver are just as nutritious as calf liver. Beef liver needs longer cooking by braising to make a tender product.

Now for more news. You know pork liver is very inexpensive. Well; here's a way to prepare pork liver so that there will be no porky flavor or odor. The trick is simple. Just braise the liver. The browning followed by slow moist cooking makes the liver mild, tender and delicious. A little catsup, lemon juice, or vinegar improves the flavor.

So, why not serve liver and bacon more often? The man of the house will agree that a generous serving of fried onions is the best-known accompaniment for this noble dish. But don't forget to price lamb liver and pork liver.

The following ways of cooking liver will vary your menus:

Lamb Liver and Bacon—Season sliced lamb liver. Dip into flour. Pan fry in a little bacon drippings or lard until well browned. Serve with bacon. Time: 10 to 15 minutes.

Spanish Liver with Lima Beans—Use either canned lima beans or dried lima beans to make this dish. If the dried beans are used, soak in water for 2 hours then boil until tender. Slice ½ pound pork liver in ½-inch slices. Cut in 1-inch pieces. Season and dredge with flour. Brown 1 small sliced onion and liver in 2 tablespoons lard (or bacon drippings). Add ½ cup tomatoes. Cover and cook slowly 20 to 30 minutes. Serve over the hot lima beans.

Variations: Use toast, rice, spaghetti or red beans in place of the lima beans.

"WE NEED VITAMINS," by H. Eddy and G. G. Hawley, is an eye-opener for you—if you can't remember one vitamin from another; if you are a housewife planning family meals; if you are skeptical about the claims made for the value of vitamins; if you think that vitamins are a magic cure-all; if you are taking, or plan to take vitamin concentrates or capsules; if you are puzzled by the complexity of everything you have read on the subject. This book is in reality a primer that explains the nature and functions of all the known vitamins. The publishers are Reinhold Publishing Corporation. The price is $1.50.

"OUR CANDY RECIPES," by Mary B. VanArsdale and Ruth Parrish Casa Emellos, is a valuable source of instructions on the subject of candy-making. Besides chapters on proper utensils, syrups and the candy box itself, are those on quick and easy candies, taffies, nougat, the brittles, such as butterscotch toffies, clear, hard candies and lollypops. One of the chief features of the book is the chapter on refrigerator ice creams, which are delicious and easy to make. Publishers are M. Barrows & Co., Inc. The price is $2.

"AMERICA'S NUTRITION PRIMER" answers the question, "What to eat and why." Written by Eleanor Sense, it translates facts into a book that is usable and readable. Also, it serves as a guide for meals at home or in restaurants—meals that assure a sufficiency of all food elements. It conforms to the dietary yardstick set as a standard by United States Government scientists and home economists. Chapters are devoted to the correct preparation and cooking of foods for retaining vitamin content, marketing, practical menus for budget-watchers. Publishers are M. Barrows & Co., Inc. The price is $1.

Veterans, N. J. Man Differ on Pension Bills

By the Associated Press

The American Legion and several other veterans' organizations yesterday supported two bills to broaden the World War pension program, but another witness said they would entail enormous expenditures for "training camp heroes who never smelled gunpowder."

The opposition witness, Robert B. Luchars, of Montclair, N. J., national commander of the American Veterans Association, told a Senate subcommittee that the bills had been "sneaked through" the House and might cost 30 billion dollars in the next 100 years.

Earlier Representative Rankin, (Democrat), of Mississippi, chairman of the House Committee on World War Legislation, vigorously denied that the bills involved a "wholesale raid on the Treasury."

Strong support for both bills was registered by spokesmen for the American Legion, Veterans of Foreign Wars, Disabled American Veterans of the World War, the Order of Purple Heart and their auxiliaries.

They said the first bill merely would increase from $30 to $40 the monthly compensation for veterans totally and permanently disabled through causes not classed as "service-connected.' It also would make all veterans eligible to such payments on reaching 65 years, if their income was less than $1000 annually if single or $2500 if married.

The second bill would grant pensions ranging from $12 to $56 to widows, children and dependent parents of deceased veterans. Widows and children of veterans who could prove service-connected disability now get pensons.

A. B. Degges, 67, Dies; Va. Catholic Leader

Norfolk, Va., Nov. 27 (AP).—Addison B. Degges, 67, for many years an outstanding leader in Catholic activities in Norfolk, died at 5:25 a. m. today in a local hospital. He was a native of Washington, D. C., and had resided in Norfolk for a number of years. He was a son of the late Capt. William Oliver Degges and Mrs. Ann Elizabeth Fenwick Degges.

Garbo's New Film Salacious? Reviewer Almost Goes to Sleep

By Frederick C. Othman
United Press Staff Writer

Hollywood, Nov. 27.—Greta Garbo's bathing suit only emphasizes her lack of curves, and the plot has been done umpteen times, so Hollywood tonight couldn't understand the reason for all the shooting over the "Great Garbo's" latest movie, "Two-Faced Woman."

The film, in which she sometimes looks wet, and sometimes cold, has been listed by the Legion of Decency as Class C—unfit for human view. The Police Department of Providence, R. I., has banned the film, without even seeing it. Catholic Archbishop Francis J. Spellman of New York denounced it as "dangerous to public morals.'

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, which made the film, kept mum. Will Hays, the movie czar, likewise had nothing to say, while Miss Garbo presumably was munching a carrot in her usual solitude. She could NOT be reached.

Others connected with the film insisted they couldn't understand all the rumpus. They said it had been made along the lines of Hollywood's standard comedy plot 2-B wherein the boy marries girl in the first reel. She leaves him and he spends the rest of the picture trying to make her a wife in more than name only. This particular plot was used first about four years ago as a wrinkle to get around the censors. The theory was that if the hero married the heroine in the opening shot then nobody could condemn his subsequent love-making maneuvers. Dozens of films were manufactured on this premise, with never a peep from anyone.

Came the Garbo picture and the Legion cracked down. The film has been exhibited nowhere, except in a few isolated towns in New England. This correspondent is one of the few persons outside the censors and the executives of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer who has viewed it and with all respect to the blue pencil boys, he must take exception and class it not as salacious, but merely as dull.

Mostly she wears ski suits. In one shot she emerges from a swimming pool in a tight black bathing suit, which emphasizes her lack of curves. In another she wears a weird costume consisting of long black pants, over which is a transparent skirt.

This reviewer sat for one hour and a half, watching Miss Garbo and friends. His morals weren't injured, but along about the sixth reel he almost went to sleep.

Stricter Cafe Sanitary Rules Asked, Blood Tests Opposed

The Commissioners yesterday gave both increased powers and a warning to Dr. George C. Ruhland, District health officer, as the House District Committee pressed for greater control of venereal disease in Washington.

A recommendation that local restaurant employes submit to periodic blood tests was the issue as Dr. Ruhland and Commissioner Guy Mason sat down with the District Committee under the temporary chairmanship of Representative Schulte (Democrat), of Indiana.

Dr. Ruhland submitted a set of regulations which would tighten sanitary rules in local eating establishments, but did not go to the limit desired by the committee, which is urging him to recommend legislation requiring that employes receive blood tests.

Reaffirming his stand taken before the committee Wednesday when Dr. Thomas Parran, surgeon general, expressed the same viewpoint, Dr. Ruhland said yesterday, "Veneral diseases cannot be transmitted in food. There is not such a case in medical history."

Accepts Tentative Rules

Objecting to Dr. Ruhland's statement, the committee nevertheless accepted his tentative regulations, the chief of which would permit temporary suspension of the license of an eating establishment repeatedly breaking sanitary laws.

The health officer's principal objection to a law requiring the blood tests is that it would be too expensive to enforce and would net few good results. He emphasized the importance of "follow-up treatments" of syphilis and gonorrhea victims as the most effective means of combating venereal diseases.

He cited the fact that his department has consistently been refused a sufficient budget for control of venereal diseases in the District through clinics.

Commissioner Mason then decleared:

"We'll go along with Dr. Ruhland's recommendations 100 per cent. But he will have to make them. We can't. He must run his own department, or there will have to be a department head who can."

Later he said, "We, the Commissioners, aren't experts. Dr. Ruhland and his staff are. We're going to give him a free hand."

Representative Schulte recommended that boarding houses, now approaching a total of 3000 in Washington, he said, should be brought under the regulations of the Health Department. Representative Hebert (Democrat), of Louisiana, declared that at least 20 more inspectors are essential.

Julian Richards, counsel for the Washington Restaurant Association, told the committee that he favored blood tests of restaurant employes because "we believe the public would be more confident of the restaurants."

A restaurant operator, J. E. West, seconded Richards' view. He told the committee that if Health Department inspectors were given sweeping power summarily to close a restaurant, "then I'd rather be a health inspector than own the Riggs National Bank."

Robert J. Wilson, secretary of the National Restaurant Association, declared that "we've always had a feeling" that physical examination of restaurant employes is important.

To Report Next Week

Dr. Ruhland's draft of sanitary regulations will be studied by Wilson and Corporation Counsel Richmond B. Keech, and a report made to the committee next Friday.

The committee will open hearings in the near future on a bill requiring premarital blood tests for venereal disease, with church and medical officials testifying.

The Rev. Francis J. Connell, C. Ss. R., of Catholic University, objected to the bill before the committee yesterday, declaring:

"The attitude of the Catholic Church is this: Christian marriage is a sacrament. Therefore civil authorities should not have jurisdiction over marriage, as they would under such a law."

He proposed an amendment which would allow both parties to be notified of the results of a blood test, with the result that they could proceed with a marriage contract in full knowledge of the health conditions of one another.

He expressed the belief that in virtually all instances where one of the parties was found to be infected the marriage would be voluntarily abandoned.

Red Tape Threatens Penny Milk Here

already made by school authorities is considered satisfactory, this time may be saved.

4. Specifications must then be prepared to permit the SMA to accept bids on the delivery work. Bids must then be received, opened, and studied before a contract can be let. This process probably will take from two to three weeks additional.

5. The contract can then be let and actual deliveries started in accordance with the terms of the contract.

Since the Christmas holidays are only a month away, and since the school term ends only a month after Christmas, Steck did not see any point to rushing the program to completion before the new semester.

"After all, then we might only have a week or two of the old semester left," Steck said. "I don't think the school authorities would want to get the program under way for such a small part of the semester."

The program outlined above assumes that all the necessary steps will be taken without any serious hitch. But that serious hitches can develop in the most unexpected places when official red tape is involved, is demonstrated by the fact that Washington children still do not enjoy the penny-a-half-pint program although it has been operating elsewhere for almost a year and a half.

One possible hitch would involve methods of integrating the penny milk project with the present free lunch program of the SMA. Milk is served on the free lunch program, but present regulations forbid the distribution of more than a half pint of "surplus" milk a day to a child.

The program approved by the School Board, according to Supt. of Schools Frank W. Ballou, would cover 66 private and parochial schools and seven settlement houses. Where 8486 half pints of milk are now served in schools under the free lunch program, consumption would jump 309.2 per cent to 34,726 half pints under the new program.

S. W. Williams, Wilson Aide, Is Dead at 75

Stephen W. Williams, 75, special assistant to the Attorney General in the Wilson Administration and former Takoma Park mayor, died yesterday afternoon at his home at 222 Cedar Avenue in Takoma Park.

Mr. Williams, who had been in ill health for several years, gained notice as the Government attorney in the famous Oregon-California land-grant case.

Previously he had been an attorney in the Federal Land Office in the Department of Interior.

Mr. Williams is credited with many Takoma Park civic improvements, made during his administration as mayor. He was particularly active in obtaining concrete paving.

The son of a Baptist preacher and born in Hardeeville, S. C., Mr. Williams was educated at Furman University, Greenville, S. C., and at the Columbian College, now the George Washington University Law School.

Survivors include his wife and five children: John K. Williams, Takoma Park, a member of the Montgomery County Board of Zoning Appeals; Mrs. Robert B. Havell, Washington; Mrs. Amelia W. Burroughs, Takoma Park; Sidney W. Williams, Oakland, Calif., and Stephen Richard Williams, Bellingham, Wash.

Funeral services will be at 2:30 p. m. Saturday from the Warner E. Pumphrey funeral home, 8434 Georgia Avenue, Silver Spring, Md. Burial will be in Glenwood Cemetery here.

U. S. May Soon Return Plant to Air Associates

Undersecretary of War Robert P. patterson said yesterday he had "every expectation" that the plant of Air Associates, Inc., under new management, soon would be transferred from the War Department back to private control.

Patterson, in a statement, praised Frederic G. Coburn, who was elected president of the Bendix, N. J., firm, and added:

"I am pleased that the board of directors has chosen a man of experience and ability and I have every expectation that under his management the War Department will soon be able to return operation of the plant to the company's own control with assurance production will proceed without interruption."

Coburn succeeds F. Leroy Hill, head of the aircraft parts firm during the months of labor dispute that preceded seizure by the Federal Government.

Hill subsequently resigned, asserting the War Department had made his resignation a prerequisite to return of the plant to private ownership.

Restrictions Due On High-Test Gas For Civilian Cars

Defense officials said yesterday that increasing defense demands for high-test gasoline may force sharp restrictions on its use by civilian motorists.

It was learned that representatives of the Office of Production Management and the Petroleum Coordinator's Office asked the petroleum industry to determine by December 8 what effect a curtailment order would have on the industry.

The petroleum industry, it was reported, was asked to gauge the effect of curtailment in various degrees, ranging up to complete elimination of high-test gas from the civilian market.

Strict Moral Curbs Urged At Camps

Clubs Federation Calls for Stringent Enforcement of Law Against Prostitutes

Stronger enforcement of the May Act to control prostitution around Army camps was urged in a resolution approved at the meeting of the District Federation of Women's Clubs yesterday.

The resolution was presented by Mrs. Ernest William Howard, chairman of the federation's division of laws.

The federation also adopted a resolution urging that "the present laws encompassing social security and unemployment compensation applying to homes housing four or more persons be lifted during the present emergency, and the minimum wage requirements be kept in compliance with the original law as restored by the decision of the Supreme Court."

In the discussion it was pointed out that numerous homes would have to take in roomers during the influx of defense workers here. The amount of bookkeeping on social security and unemployment compensation that housekeepers would have to do for domestic servants in such homes was cited in the discussion.

The resolution was presented by the federation's department of legislation, of which Mrs. Mary Wright Johnson is chairman.

The federation met at 2600 Sixteenth Street Northwest with Mrs. Arthur Watkins, president, in charge.

The federation voted to cooperate with the Washington Round Table of the National Conference of Christians and Jews. Mrs. W. A. Winkelhaus was named by the federation to keep in touch with the work of that group.

After the morning meeting and luncheon yesterday, presidents of clubs affiliated with the federation conferred with its officers.

Mrs. Whitehurst Returns From Speaking Tour

Mrs. John L. Whitehurst, president of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, has returned to Washington after a four-week speaking trip to Mississippi, Louisiana and Texas, after which she spent several days in Mexico City.

Mrs. Whitehurst was the principal speaker at the conventions of the three State federations in Biloxi, Miss.; Monroe, La., and Dallas, Tex. She found the women in these States alive to the defense problems confronting the country, and with active programs based on the national defense plans of the general federation, she said.

From Dallas, she went to Fort Worth for a few days to perfect arrangements for the annual convention of the General Federation in that city April 27-May 2. From there she went to Mexico City to complete plans for the post-convention tour which the federation will sponsor. In addition to two clubs in Monterrey, which belong to the General Federation, the Pan-American Round Table, a representative group of Mexico City, will cooperate with the federation in holding a forum during the stay the American clubwomen. Subjects of education, welfare and defense of the two countries will be discussed.

Many courtesies were extended to Mrs. Whitehurst by the Mexican government and by the United States Embassy, both of which are cooperating in plans for the visit of the federation representatives. The Good Neighbor party will leave Fort Worth May 2. It will make stops at Austin and San Antonio, where the clubwomen will entertain the visitors, and the party will arrive in Mexico City on May 5, Cinco de Mayo, which is a special holiday, with a colorful celebration.

Women Neglect Opportunities, Visitor Says

That women of the United States have not made the most of their "situation of privilege" was stated by Dra. Maria Teresa F. de Gaudino, president of the Argentine Federation of University Women, at a two-language luncheon in her honor yesterday at headquarters of the American Association of University Women.

"With all the privileges women have enjoyed in this country they should have positions of greater importance in government," she said.

Dra. Gaudino, a doctor of medicine, teacher of university women in her own country, director of a large maternity hospital and first woman in Argentina to perform a surgical operation, spoke friendly even as she criticized.

She said she had traveled over Europe, observing the position of women, and if had been her conclusion that those of Scandinavia and the United States were most independent, least dependent on marriage for their livelihood, but that here women had failed to take full advantage of that fact.

Dra. Gaudino came to Washington for the purpose of getting better acquainted with the A. A. U. W. as a result of interest kindled by the regional meeting of the International Federation of University Women held in Havana, Cuba, November 20-22.

Mrs. Yna McClintock, comptroller of A. A. U. W., acted as chief interpreter. However, about half the guests spoke Spanish in explaining to the honor guests their own occupations and professions.

Honored with Dra. Gaudino was Dr. L. S. Rowe, director general, Pan American Union. Others present were Dr. Kathryn McHale, Dr. Esther Caukin Brunauer, Mrs. Ruth W. Tryon, Miss Helen Hosp, Dr. Mary Turgi, Miss Minnie Bunker, Miss Lucile Furman, Miss Bess Furman, Mrs. Harriett Ahlers Houdlette, Mrs. Samuel Horton Brown, Dr. Elsie Brown, Dr. M. Margaret Ball, Mrs. Lawrence Radford, Mrs. James Irwin, Mrs. Lydia Driggs and Miss Irene Wright, of the Division of Cultural Relations, State Department.

Glove and Turban Twosome

The Gentler Sex

Wail of a Mugwump

Oh, to be a Tory,
And know just what is "sound,"
And give dictums on all questions raised
In accents that resound.

Oh, to be a "worker,"
And hew to the party line,
And not have to rack my brain to know
What I personally would opine

Oh, to be a bigot,
And sure to go to Heaven,
And have no disturbing doubts creep in
My principles to leaven

Oh, to be a sophomore,
And make a quick decision,
On all the issues of the day
With firmness and precision

Today's Social Notes

(From The Truthtown Torch)

An innovation in benefits will feature the annual Emerald and Champagne Costume Ball to be held a week from Thursday at the Hotel Swank. Debs will be recruited to sell tickets to the ball as well as lend decoration.

"We feel that as a matter of defense everyone should really work this year to make the ball a success," said Mrs. Abraham Lincoln DePeyster, chairman of the committee on arrangements. Mrs. DePeyster, in order to conserve her strength, has taken a suite in the Hotel Swank and receives her committees and directs her secretaries from her bed.

Masseuse service is provided daily at the ball headquarters for overworked members of the committee.

Eavesdropping

Overheard at the Stuveysant Mixmaster's cocktail party yesterday: Mrs. Rutherford Banal remarking to Mrs. Sylvester Trite on the beauty of the table decorations; Philander Plunkette asking Mrs. Mike McPace for an introduction to her dashing house guest, Mrs. Bathsheba Twirl; Herringbone Tweed, gourmet and collector, complimenting Mrs. Mixmaster on her anchovy paste; Mrs. Whitherford Schooner asking Mrs. Forsythe Bleakhouse to lend the "prestige" of her name to a new movement; Mrs. Thornberry Flitt telling Mrs. Juniper Bounce she was dying to run up to New York for a weekend; Mrs. St. John Chinchilla, bi-monthly columnist for the Huntstown Bugle telling Carrington Stepp she was simply rushed to death; Col. Carter Lee Randolph Warren Standish telling Mrs. Mixmaster it was a lovely party; several hundred others saying the same thing.

More Defense Delay

The Ladies' Parachute Patrol has adjourned its drilling until after January 1 to permit its members to do their Christmes shopping. "We felt we could safely take this little holiday," said Mrs. Badminton Bellweather, commander, in view of the fact that the Nazis are well tied up on the Eastern front."

At the Wedding

"Don't Dot and Tony make a stunning couple?"

"Yes, but not as stunning as Dot and Dick did."

"Nor Tony and Barbara. You remember?"

"Yes, indeed! Why I even remember Tony and Daphne's wedding."

"Not Daphne's! Daphne's Dot's daughter—the one who's matron of honor today."

"Oh, of course! I didn't mean Daphne and Tony. I meant Daphne and—and—well, which one of her husbands was it that I saw Daphne married to?"

"It must have been her first husband—Jerry."

"Oh, no, no! Jerry was Dot's first husband—Daphne's father. Now who on earth was Daphne's first husband?"

"Well, I know her second husband was a Freddy somebody—"

"Freddy Pippin?"

"No! No! Freddy Pippin is Daphne's step-brother—that is Dick's son by his second wife—the one before Dot. She was a Chaff. Delia Chaff—"

"No! No! Delia Chaff was Jerry's first wife—that is Dot's first husband's first wife—"

"Wait a minute! I thought Delia Chaff was the first wife of Daphne's second husband—you know the one who later married Barbara—"

"No! No! Tony married Barbara——

No, Tony just now married Daphne—I mean Dot—no, Daphne—oh, I give up!"

"So do I!"

Bride of Few Months Asks How to Hold Husband's Attention at Parties; Although Considerate of Her At Home, Invariably He Neglects Her in Company

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: We have been married only a few months, and at home my husband is very attentive and considerate. But when we are out with other people, he completely ignores me and centers his attention on some other woman who happens to be in the party. That is, if she is attractive and single. He takes it upon himself to see that she has a good time. And I am left to shift for myself.

This action of his makes me miserable; and, of course, ruins my evening. I have never been jealous before and am ashamed of myself for not being able to control it in this instance. Can you advise me either (1) how to overcome my jealousy; or (2) how to make my husband want to put me first in his attentions? I am very much in love with him and feel sure that he loves me. But if he does, why would he want to behave in this manner, when he knows it hurts me? I shall appreciate your help. JANE.

DEAR JANE: You are not called upon to "overcome jealousy," in this instance, for the simple reason that your uncomfortable reaction to your husband's sophomoric behavior in company is not a reaction of jealousy. Jealousy is an apprehensive, suspicious, distrustful emotion. And this is not your feeling. You are sure that he loves you; and therefore doubly vexed by his contradictory conduct. What your attitude betokens is resentment,—which the dictionary defines as a "feeling of indignant displeasure, provoked by something regarded as wrong.'" And the correct definition of "indignant'" is "righteous anger, excited by what is unworthy."

It is an incontrovertible fact that your husband's rude disregard of you in company is both "wrong" and "unworthy." An attitude of mutual consideration, always and everywhere displayed, is the very archstone of married love. Unless this truth is recognized and served in marriage, the relationship is built on shifting sands.

Your husband's public attitude toward you is not only disloyal and inconsiderate, but actually vulgar, in its implication of negligent insolence. Furthermore, it is self defeating,—since his motive, of course, is to try to "build himself up" in somebody's eyes, by showing what a "devil of a fellow" he can be. But as Irving Bacheller, reviewing a rich life at the age of 82, reminds all husbands: "The surest way to make friends is to be in love with your wife and let the world know it. People like that," he says.

The most charitable judgment one can pass upon your husband is to conclude that he is, as yet, essentially juvenile in personality, and that his offensive behavior—in neglecting you in company, while concentrating flirtatiously upon single, attractive "other women"—reflects ignorant youthful exuberance, rather than an involuntary compulsion to play "Don Juan."

Giving him the benefit of the doubt, therefore, and assuming that his principal shortcomings are lack of good sense and innate grace of feeling, I suggest that he stands in need of a constructive "calling down." And I should say that you, as his "better half," are obliged in conscience to point out to him that he is misbehaving badly, in a manner that not only reflects great discredit upon himself; but threatens, indeed, to wreck his marriage before it is well begun.

Fortified by the self respecting knowledge that your honestly indignant, ethically justified disapproval cannot be dismissed as a "jealous outburst," it should be a fairly simple matter for you to challenge his conduct, in right royal fashion. Ask him if he knows what he is doing to his marriage, and to your feeling for him. Ask him whether he is a man, or still a high school kid. Ask him to think it over, and tell you what woman in her right mind would care to go out twice in succession with a man who dropped her like a hot cake the minute some passing fair damsel came in sight? Tell him if you weren't his wife, you probably wouldn't even have let him see you home, after many of these parties you've sat through recently, while he danced attendance on somebody else.

Tell him, in effect: "Frankly, I'm disappointed in you; disappointed and hurt and heartsick. I'd almost rather take a beating than go out with you any more. And while these may sound like harsh words—I think it is only fair that you should know how I feel, etc., etc." Unless the matter can be brought to frank and free discussion, and a remedial course of action arrived at by such means, it is likely that your marriage will land on the rocks, eventually. M. H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

U. S. Food Habits Held Due for Shift

By Ida Jean Kain

DON'T WORRY about our soldiers not being well fed. A merchant complained recently that the "Army is teaching the boys luxurious habits." And from a quick glance at the Thanksgiving menu, it would seem there might be some basis for his contention.

That, of course, is not every-day food. To get back to our merchant. His observation was provoked by the sight of hillbilly soldiers, who hadn't tasted milk since the shift from the baby bottle, downing their daily three-quarters quart with gusto. "What will happen," he wanted to know, "when they go home from the Army?"

Perhaps I am overly optimistic, but I believe it will work out this way. They will find the folks back home have changed their food habits, too. The entire country will be eating more of the protective foods. The increased demand will step up production, and the prices will level off. If these foods have been relatively expensive, it is mainly because there has been a lack of demand.

The milk, fruits and vegetables our soldiers are learning to like are not luxuries. They are vital factors in health, efficiency and morale and as such are to be classed as necessities. They are just as important to the civilian as to the soldier and the Nation as a whole is becoming more nutrition-minded every day of this emergency period. I don't believe the people generally will lag far behind in acquiring the food habits that make for a powerful country.

From sheer force of numbers, the Army will help the change along. One and one-half million young men with the right habits of eating are bound to have an effect on our 34 million families. In turn, this will exert a terrific influence on industry and agriculture, for in both production is regulated by demand.

As so aptly pointed out by Colonel R. A. Osmun, of the Quartermaster Corps, at the annual convention of the American Dietetic Association: The answer to the demand for more milk will be more dairies.

Returned Army selectees and Hollywood stars are changing the Nation's food habits. Maureen O'Hara (above) is one youn gactress who depends upon milk, vegetables and exercise for her radiant, youthful complexion

Grandeur of Greek Thinking Holds Good ot This Day

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin

Those Greeks — what people they were! Their achievements have never been surpassed . . . in art, in literature, in law, in ethics. To this day we go back to them for specific themes as well as for inspiration. For nothing man has done before or since has topped the clarity of their thinking, interpreted into the superb forms and symbols that we still regard as our intellectual and artistic ideal.

The purity of Greek architecture makes it adaptable for small as well as great buildings. The grace and simplicity of their ornament still awes and thrills us, still contributes our richest idiom of design detail. The obvious yet consummately beautiful drapery of Greek costumes leaves us humble, knowing its perfection.

Remote from today's life . . . is that what you are thinking? Ah no—we doubt that there is a home in America that does not draw upon the Greeks for some detail in its furnishing—the scroll motif in that rug or chintz or plate, the acanthus design on those silver spoons, the finish of that door, the molding on that mantel.

In many ways it is discouraging to realize that, despite the porcelain plumbing and the motor cars of this prideful era, mankind must surely have reached his great climax in the Greeks. But if we would learn from them, the lesson would be that all the beauty of their civilization stemmed from the grandeur of their thinking.

Guests Who Attended Mother's Debut See Delphine Colquitt Make Bow

In the presence of a number of friends who were on hand when her mother, the former Miss Julia Heyl, was presented, attractive Miss Delphine Colquitt, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph C. H. Colquitt, made her bow to society yesterday afternoon.

The fete was a tea dance given by her parents at the Sulgrave Club, and between the hours of 4 and 7 o'clock, several hundred residential Washingtonians and a number from the official contingent turned out to enjoy the pleasant party.

Standing near the top of the stairway were the debutante of the day and her mother, who were continually greeting guests from the opening hour until the orchestra played its final note shortly before time for dinner. Miss Colquitt wore a bouffant frock of white lace, fashioned with an off-the-shoulder neckline, and sprinkled with bow-knots of sequins outlining the pattern in the lace. A floral fan of white orchids and sweet peas further accented her becoming ensemble.

Mrs. Colquitt had chosen a black and white frock, styled with a bodice of white lace and a sweeping skirt of black chiffon. Her corsage was of white orchids.

Flowers sent to the debutante lined the walls of the spacious reception hall, the oval room, and the dining room, where a long table laden with a delicious variety of tea-time dainties, was the chief center of attention. Taking their turns at either the tea table or coffee urns were a number of Mrs. Colquitt's friends, several of whom "came out" the same season that she did.

Past Generation Is Recalled

In the group of assistants were Mrs. Chester Flather, Mrs. Parke Galliher, Mrs. Earl North, Mrs. John Harrison Knapp, Mrs. R. B. Buchanan, Mrs. Ashmead Fuller, Mrs. William T. Lightle, Mrs. George Y. Worthington, jr., Mrs. Edward Tierney, Mrs. Lewis H. Watkins, the Misses Julia and Mary Minnigerode, and Mrs. John D. Newbold, of Chestnut Hills, Pa. Mrs. Newbold and her husband arrived in Washington yesterday and are house guests of Mr. and Mrs. Colquitt.

Autumn blossoms, interspersed with lacy palms, decorated the ballroom, where John Martin's orchestra played for three hours, and an attractive younger-set contingent danced to their heart's content. Watching the gala group, more than one cave-dwelling Washingtonian grew reminiscent about the debut balls of past generations, and somebody recalled that Julia Heyl was quite a belle back in her own debutante days.

Dinner Follows At Chevy Chase

"Every bit as attractive as her winsome daughter," added one guest, who boasted that he "came early and stayed late" that day Col. Charles H. Heyl gave the debut tea for his pretty daughter, a generation ago.

Assisting the debutante were several of her contemporaries, including Miss Margheritta Stirling, Miss Barbara Vickery, Miss Patricia Kyle, Miss Jacquelin Knapp, Miss Bella Hagner, Miss Betty Buchanan, Miss Helen Dunigan, Miss Miriam Bellinger and Miss Marian Hamilton; who will make her formal bow to society today.

When the last guest was greeted, the final sandwich passed, and the final dance tune played for the afternoon, Miss Colquitt, her house party and a group of young men went on to the Chevy Chase Club for dinner and dancing. Escorts for the evening were William Sheldon, Henry Pike, Enoch Chase, jr., Harlow Weller, James McCord, Edward Tierney, Ralph Carbo, Svend Jordan, John W. Thomason, 3d, John Vance George Y. Worthington, 3d, John Sands and Julian Colquitt, brother of the debutante.

A graduate of Georgetown Convent, Miss Colquitt is attending Abbott Art School this season and hopes to continue her study of commercial design in New York next winter.

Thanksgiving Party Given by Outhwaites

An honest-to-goodness old-fashioned Thanksgiving party was given by Mr. and Mrs. Leonard Outhwaite last night at their R Street house. Slender, honey-blond Mrs. Outhwaite wore a hostess gown of pink-rose with a long blue sash, its simple Grecian lines setting off her dancer's gracefulness.

Her sister, Miss Deloras Garvin, who makes her home with the Outhwaites, wore a gray gown with red shoes and flower for contrast. The Outhwaites who came here about a year ago from New York have always made a Thanksgiving party an annual occasion, and they also usually give another large party each spring.

Among the guests who were invited for cocktails and buffet supper were James H. R. Cromwell, Mrs. Lionel Atwill, George Erhret, Mr. and Mrs. Stacy May, Mr. and Mrs. Corrington Gill, Mr. and Mrs. Philip Wilson, Maj. and Mrs. Edward Clark, Mr. and Mrs. Leon Henderson, Mrs. Grace Eustis, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Walker, Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Friendly, Oswald Knauth, of New York; Mrs. Edward Treglown, of Montreal, Canada, and William Lewis.

Also present were Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Thomas, Henry Hansfelt, Mrs. J. Bretschnider, of Denver, Colo., Mr. and Mrs. C. B. Baldwin, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Woofter, jr., Mr. and Mrs. Carl Sharp, A. J. T. Taylor, Maj. and Mrs. C. F. Robinson, Mr. and Mrs. George Mitchell, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Grimm.

Diplomatic Set Bids Farewell To Miss Natalia Aszkenazy

The Washington scene changes rapidly these days. Yesterday Count Jerzy Potocki, former Polish Ambassador to the United States, attended the farewell party of Miss Natalia Aszkenazy, was recognized by only a few, chatted briefly and then departed. Less than two years ago his appearance at any party would have caused a sensation and he would have been surrounded by gay groups from the moment he arrived.

Another high ranking guest at yesterday's party who moved quietly and unobtrusively through the throng was Mme. Oumansky, wife of the retiring Soviet Ambassador to this country. The Counselor and Charge d'Affaires of the Soviet Embassy, Andrei A. Gromyko, and Mme. Gromyko were also guests.

Receiving in the drawing room of her apartment, Miss Aszkenazy was wearing a wool frock of warm purplish brown tones, fashioned with a V neckline and long sleeves. With it she wore a single strand of pearls and pearl earrings.

In the dining room and throughout the attractive Sixteenth Street apartment were masses of red roses, and assisting the hostess during the afternoon was Mme. Dobrowolska, wife of the Assistant Military Attache of the Polish Embassy.

Soon to Be on Her Way to Moscow

Miss Aszkenazy, who expects to leave Washington by the end of next week, will soon be on her way to Moscow, where she will be her country's first woman attache in the Soviet capital. She will also be the only woman in the diplomatic corps in Moscow and one of the few feminine diplomats in the world. She has been on the press and public relations staff at the Polish Embassy in Washington for the last two years.

Many Others Are Present

Because of the whirligig state of "the situation," she doesn't know from one day to the next what her plans will be, nor whether she will go straight to Moscow or report to the home office in Poland first, but she will be leaving Washington during the first part of December.

Still others noted at yesterday's party were Mr. and Mrs. Albert Dewey; the First Secretary of the Netherlands Legation, Dr. H. R. van Houten and Mme. van Houten, and the Secretary of the South African Legation, J. R. Jordaan and Mrs. Jordaan, the latter inviting friends to drop in for cocktails on December 6.

Still others included Mme. Hurban, wife of the Minister of Czecho-Slovakia; Mme. Sven Dahlman, wife of the First Secretary of the Swedish Legation; Mr. and Mrs. Hubert Elliston, Mr. and Mrs. Kingsbury Smith; Ernest K. Lindley, George Abell, Andre Visson, Mr. and Mrs. Blair Bolles, Dr. and Mrs. Henry Field, Mr. and Mrs. Max Thornberg, Miss Craig McGeachy and Senator Casanova and Dr. Manas, of Cuba.

Richard Crooks Is an Absent Guest; Virginia Cotillion to Be in Washington

The town's talking about:

Richard Crooks, the noted singer, who appeared as soloist with the National Symphony Orchestra Wednesday evening . . . and then failed to show up at the supper party Mrs. Edward Beale McLean had planned in his honor . . .

Count Jerzy Potocki's current Capital visit . . . and the fact that some of his former associates at the Polish Embassy have sent him messages of welcome through mutual friends—"Although, of course, we won't see him while he's here." Seems scores of Washingtonians have called the Embassy asking where the one-time envoy is staying, only to receive a frigid reply, and no information. Well, if you want to know, he's registered at the Wardman Park Hotel. . . .

Mrs. Arthur Vandenberg's return to Washington where she has shoals of friends . . . and her announcement that she won't be here long. Only until the middle of December, in fact. Then, back to Michigan for Christmas. . . .

The fact that in a recent paragraph I carefully listed two of Mrs. Frederick McEvoy's former husbands and left out a third—Preston Gibson, who was better known in Washington than any of the others. The former Beatrice Benjamin's marriage to him, like another to D. B. Pratt, and still another to Aubrey Cartwright, of London, was dissolved in divorce. Gibson was the son of Senator Randall Lee Gibson, of Louisiana, and was a nephew of Chief Justice White. . . .

Mrs. Arnold Gives Gay Luncheon

Gayly informal, and practically impromptu, was the small luncheon Mrs. Thurman Arnold gave yesterday at her home in Virginia. Along about 10 o'clock in the morning, the hostess decided she'd like to gather in a few friends for Thanksgiving turkey, No. 2. Chief source of inspiration for whipping up a party was Mrs. Charles Clark, who is down from New Haven, Conn., for a few days, and finds her Washington calendar so crowded, she is going to stay on a few days to get it cleared. Scheduled for today is the luncheon Mrs. Robert H. Jackson has planned in her honor.

Judge and Mrs. Clark, and Dr. and Mrs. Wesley A. Sturges, also of New Haven, arrived a couple of days ago for Mrs. Bruce Smith's birthday dinner dance. A previous engagement kept Mrs. Sturges away from Mrs. Arnold's get-together; but I must say she missed a good time, a gala round of talk, and a delicious luncheon.

Others there in addition to Mrs. Clark were Mrs. William O. Douglas, Mrs. Lister Hill, Mrs. Smith, and Mrs. Frederick Richardson, who tore off later to a meeting in Alexandria where a momentous decision was to be made—whether the Virginia Cotillion was to remain in the Old Dominion this year, or be moved into Washington where a more spacious setting could be provided.

It Will Be Here on January 2

Straight from headquarters a couple of hours later came the announcement—the forthcoming Virginia Cotillion will take place January 2, and for the first time in its history will move out of the Old Dominion and into Washington. The Shoreham ballroom will be the scene of the event, which is to be preceded by a record number of supper parties.

William Byrd will lead the cotillion, as he has every year since it was revived during the Centennial. Four debutantes of the season will also head the figure, with Miss Evelyn Dixon Dillard, daughter of Mrs. Frank Mason Dillard, leading the line.

The cotillion, as you know, is a revival of the famous birthnight balls which began in George Washington's time and were formerly held at Gadsby's Tavern. The latter setting was used for the first cotillion in this era, but the dance was moved later to the George Mason Hotel, and last year, took place at the Army-Navy Country Club. Now, it's on the way to Washington. Maybe Madison Square Garden next?

Brazilian Envoy Fetes The Byron Foys

Mr. and Mrs. Byron Foy, of New York, who arrived in Washington yesterday and will be at the Brazilian Embassy for a brief visit, were the guests in whose honor the Brazilian Ambassador and Mme. Martins entertained at dinner last evening. A similar party will take place this evening. Mrs. Foy is the former Thelma Chrysler.

Justice Frank Murphy was ranking guest in the company of 22. Others there were United States Minister to Latvia and Mrs. John Wiley, Mr. and Mrs. Snowden Fahnestock, Mrs. Foulke Dewey, Mrs. Loring Christie, Stewart McDonald, Mr. and Mrs. Morris Cafritz, Miss Maria Frias, Dr. and Mrs. Clarence Lee Miller, Mr. and Mrs. Dozier Gardner, Thomas Johnson and the Brazilian First Secretary and Mme. de Alencastro-Guimaraes.

The Bittencourts will be feted at a White House luncheon on Friday, and a number of other parties are being planned in their honor. The Brazilian Ambassador and Mrs. Martins will give a dinner for them and Mr. and Mrs. Drew Pearson already have cards out for a cocktail party on Tuesday for them.

Huffs Honored At Reception In Takoma Park

Lieut. Col. Perry O. Huff and Mrs. Huff, of El Paso, Tex., who are the house guests this week of Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Bruce, of Lanier Place, were honor guests at a reception given last night by Mr. and Mrs. J. Burke Knapp and Mr. and Mrs. John T. Lucker, of Takoma Park, Md.

The party, an "after 6 o'clock" affair was given at historic Malmesbury on Piney Branch Road, Takoma Park, D. C. The honored guests before Lieut. Col. Huff was stationed at Fort Bliss were residents of Takoma Park and Silver Spring for many years.

Yellow and lavender chrysanthemums and tall yellow tapers formed the centerpiece on the dining table laden with party snacks. Assisting at the punch bowl and serving coffee were Mrs. Ernest Humphrey Daniel, Mrs. Henry Nesbitt, Mrs. Christian Huff, mother of Lieut. Col. Huff, Miss Marjorie Webster and Miss Florence McCracken. The Huffs with their young daughter, Gretchen, who accompanied them here, will leave Sunday for El Paso.

The Hunt Country

By Nina Carter Tabb

MILMORE, one of the oldest houses in Loudoun County, has been purchased by Mr. and Mrs. Preston Delano, of Washington, from Mrs. John Moore. The Delanos plan to remodel the charming place a bit and make it their weekend home. Built in 1790, it has been in the Moore family since 1830.

Mr. and Mrs. Delano will build a clapboard addition to the quaint old brick and stone structure and are planning to stay there for holidays and whenever Mr. Delano, who is comptroller of the currency, can find time in his busy schedule to get away from Washington.

Two acres of land known as The Meadows were also purchased from Mrs. Emily di Zerega Currie by Mr. and Mrs. Delano. The land adjoins Milmore, and they expect to make a new driveway into their home. They will be a welcome addition to the hunt country and everyone is looking forward to meeting them.

Friends in and around Aldie are missing Mrs. Moore, who is staying with her daughter and son-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Winslow Williams at their home near Leesburg for the present. They are hoping that she will be back soon

WOLF TRAP FARM, the Virginia estate of Mr. and Mrs. Jouett Shouse, has been deserted for the winter months by its owners in favor of the Mayflower Hotel. Mrs. Shouse was hostess to the "Potomac Boxer Club," at the hotel this week, and Miss Elizabeth Herbert Lemmon, the club's secretary, motored down to the meeting from her home, The Church House, in Loudoun County.

An excellent basketball player is Miss Lucy Mitchell, daughter of the late Brig. Gen. William "Billy" Mitchell and of Mrs. Thomas B. Byrd. Miss Mitchell is captain of the "Hound" team at Foxcroft School. Her team won the recent annual "Foxes vs. Hounds" game, showing marvelous teamwork. The young captain was right on the job every minute, and she and her team gave the onlookers quite a thrilling afternoon.

The annual Thanksgiving dinner always given by Mrs. Eugene Gatewood and her daughter, Miss Julia Gatewood, at their home near Upperville, had to be postponed as the family could not be collected last Thursday, so it was held a few days ago. Gathering at midday, this jolly party lasted until late in the afternoon. A turkey dinner with all the "fixings" was served from a buffet table in the dining room and the "de Butts" clan was there in full force.

Among the guests were Mrs. Dulany de Butts, Mrs. M. M. Plaskett, Mr. and Mrs. Harry de Butts, Mrs. Dulany de Butts, jr., and her children, Dulany De Butts 3d, and Henry Hunter de Butts; Mr. and Mrs. Hunter De Butts and their children, Robert E. Lee de Butts, Hunter de Butts, jr., and Miss Molly de Butts; Mr. and Mrs. Daniel de Butts, of Baltimore, who are visiting their brother-in-law, Sammy Sands, at Fiddlers Green; Mr. and Mrs. James Plaskett—she formerly was Miss Mary Welby de Butts—of Alexandria, and their children, Miss Mary Welby Plaskett, Miss Courtney Plaskett, Miss Virginia Plaskett and James Plaskett, jr.; Dr. Richard de Butts, of Washington; Richard de Butts, Mr. and Mrs. W. J. de Butts, W. J. de Butts, jr., and Miss Mary Logan de Butts, of Arlington; Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Stephen Roszel, of Front Royal, and their children, Samuel Stephen Roszel, jr., and Miss Sally Roszel; Mr. and Mrs. William Stribling, of Markham, and their children, William Stribling, jr., and Miss Martha Stribling; Guy Hall, of Alexandria; Mrs. Lou Hall Rinker, Miss Lulu Tyson and Miss Nora Dillard, all of Upperville.

Mrs. Candee Gives Informal Party For Mme. Grouitch

At a small informal tea, the first in this winter's series, Mrs. Churchill Candee gathered in a handfull of friends yesterday afternoon to meet Mme. Grouitch, the house guest of Mrs. Walter Tuckerman. As Mrs. Candee prefers to entertain in her own apartment at 2301 Connecticut Avenue, lists are necessarily small and guests have an opportunity for real visits with one another. Ranking guest yesterday was Mrs. Harlan Fiske Stone, wife of the Associate Justice of the Supreme Court.

Receiving in the drawing room of the apartment Mrs. Candee was gowned in black crepe with a gay scarlet bodice. Centering the dining table and massed throughout the apartment were great bouquets of autumn-toned chysanthemums. Assisting her grandmother in receiving and generally in charge of the younger set among the guests was Miss Mary Churchill Candee, who came to Washington about a month ago from New York to spend the winter with Mrs. Candee.

Austins Hold Thanksgiving Fete

Celebrating yesterday in old-fashioned Vermont Thanksgiving style, Senator and Mrs. Warren R. Austin entertained a number of their old friends at dinner at the Alibi Club. In keeping with the rules of the club, the guest list could not be revealed and the time of the party itself was shrouded in secrecy.

Returning to town just in time for his own party, Senator Austin came back to Washingotn yesterday after a brief visit to his son, Lieut. Edward L. Austin, who is stationed at Fort Bragg, N. C.

Miss Wilson, Ensign Benham Are Married

An Annapolis wedding of note was that yesterday of Miss Jacqueline Smith Wilson and Ensign Blair Benham, which took place at 6 p. m. in St. Andrews Chapel with Chaplain W. N. Thomas officiating. The bride, who is the daughter of Mrs. Lucile Wilson Montgomery, of Annapolis, and Joseph F. Wilson, of California, is descended from an old Revolutionary family on her mother's side which has been traced back to Parigreen White, the first white child born as the Mayflower landed.

She was given in marriage by her grandfather, Claude Meredith Russell. Her gown was blue and silver lame, which she wore with a defense blue hat with wine veil and wine accessories. Her flowers were white orchids, and she carried a white prayerbook.

Her only attendant was her cousin, Miss Eleanor Louise Smith, of Moundsville, W. Va., who was gowned in moss green crepe studded with gold beads. Her accessories were black and she wore a yellow corsage. Ensign Richard W. Parisian was best man.

The reception took place at the bride's home on Prince George Street in Annapolis, and later the couple left for a wedding trip. They plan to attend the Army-Navy game in Philadelphia tomorrow. Until Ensign Benham is graduated from Post Graduate School in February and gets his station, they will live in Annapolis.

The bride attended Maryland University. She is a daughter of the Fort Henry Chapter of the D. A. R. in Washington and lists among her Revolutionary ancestors Lieut. Joseph White, who married Mary Griffith and settled in Maryland in 1665. Mary's father was the son of Lord Baltimore, who made the "old deed" at Maryland State House comprising about two-thirds of the State of Maryland.

Mrs. Benham, through her great-great grandmother, Mary Trisler, descended from the Marshalls of Virginia, is a direct descendant from the first Chief Justice of the United States, John Marshall.

Ensign Benham, who is the son of Col. and Mrs. Webster Lance Benham, of Oklahoma City, Okla., was graduated from the United States Naval Academy in 1941. He is the grandson of the late Brig. Gen. Daniel Debster Benham. On his maternal side, his grandfather was Isaac A. Drake, direct line of Sir Francis Drake.

Marie Sattler Entertained Here By Capt. Mullikin

Miss Marie Therese Sattler, debutante daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Augustus Edmund Sattler, of Baltimore, who will make her debut at the Bachelor's Cotillon on December 1, was the guest of honor at a dinner last evening given by Capt. Alfred Mullikin at the Army and Navy Club in Washington.

Those present included Miss Carol Yates Franklin, debutante daughter of Mrs. Harris F. Franklin; Miss Natalie Sutherland, daughter of Brig. Gen. and Mrs. R. K. Sutherland, Miss Phylis Richardson, of Fairfax, Va.; Lieut. John Breckinridge, Benjamin Dudley Hill, jr., Harry Ghett and Edmund J. Frazier, of Chicago. Mrs. Osmun Latrobe acted as Capt. Millikin's hostess at the party.

Diplomatic Aides To Wed Nov. 29

The marriage of Miss Kirsti Halmas, of Helsinki, Finland, to Jose Camacho-Lorenzana, the second secretary of the Columbian Embassy, of Bogota, Columbia, will take place November 29, at 11:30 a. m., at the private chapel of the Apostolic Delegate, Archbishop Giovanni Amleto Cicognani, who will perform the ceremony.

Miss Halmas will be given in marriage by Hjalmar J. Procope, the Minister of Finland. Her attendant will be Mrs. Blanca Martinez de Vargas, wife of Alberto Vargas, first secretary of the Colombian Embassy. Miss Halmas has been a clerk at the Finnish Legation since October, 1939. Her mother, Mrs. Anna Holm, lives in Helsinki.

The best man of Mr. Camacho-Lorenzana will be the Colombian Ambassador, Dr. Gabriel Turbay. Mr. Camacho-Lorenzana has been stationed here since August, 1940. He was the Commercial Attache of the Colombian Embassy in 1937-39 in Washington.

After the wedding a reception will be given by the Finnish Minister and Madame Procope at the Finnish Legation.

W. H. Harvey Weds Mabel E. Counts

In a double ring ceremony yesterday at Grace Baptist Church, Miss Mabel Elizabeth Counts, daughter of George Thomas Counts, of Abingdon, Va., exchanged marriage vows with Morgan Brooks Harvey, son of Walter H. Harvey, of Washington. The Rev. F. W. Johnson, assisted by the Rev. Walton L. MacMillan, officiated at the 7 o'clock ceremony.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, wore an empire gown of white silk jersey with full-shirred bodice and off-the-shoulder yoke of point Venice lace. Her fingertip veil was held with orange blossoms and she carried brides' roses. Gowned in heather rose was Mrs. Ida Dishun, sister of the bride, who was matron of honor. Miss Stevens, who was maid of honor to her aunt, wore Victoria blue. Other attendants were Miss Alice Harvey, cousin of the groom, whose dress was wood rose; Miss Beatrice Robinson, who wore peacock blue, and Miss Audrey Myers, whose gown was blue.

Ring bearer was Fred Paul Fischer, jr., 3-year-old cousin of the bridegroom, and flower girl was Jean Elizabeth Rice. Lieut. Cecil L. Harvey was best man for his brother and ushers were Roy Steagall, Hall Simpson, E. Cole Walker and Roy Glisson, jr.

FDIC May Get Into Defense Picture

By Jerry Kluttz

A move is being made to bring Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation into the defense picture by turning over to the FDIC staff some of Justice's defense work. Attorney General Francis Biddle is believed to have finally convinced FDIC Chairman Leo T. Crowley to take over the department's Alien Property Bureau and other defense work. Crowley would continue as FDIC chairman and members of his staff would be loaned to Justice for part-time work. With this tie-up, FDIC would be assured of remaining in Washington. It has been suggested in some quarters that FDIC be moved out of Washington to make room for space-shy defense agencies.

An OPM dollar-a-year man was talking with a Government-wise friend the other day. "You know," he began, "I don't have to worry about living expenses and I'm delighted to work for Uncle Sam at a dollar-a-year in this emergency, but I must admit that I didn't realize my expenses would be as great as they are." The dollar-a-year man then told of considerable travel he had done since his appointment. "Don't you put in a voucher for travel?" his friend asked. "No," came the reply, "you see I'm entitled only to a dollar-a-year." The friend explained he was entitled to travel and $10 per diem. At that the businessman made a dash for the front office to get an expense voucher.

The Economic Defense Board is being reorganized into five geographical divisions, American Hemisphere, Far East, British Empire, European, and African. Existing divisions such as Intelligence, which did the blacklisting of Axis firms in South America, projects, and economic planning and analysis are being absorbed by the new divisions. The reorganization is being directed by Milo Perkins, executive director, and his assistant, Col. Roy Lord.

Lobbying Charges

Both CCC and NYA are being accused of lobbying activities as the time rapidly approaches for the President to request Congress for legislation to merge the two agencies. NYA got several pages of "accomplishments" in the Congressional Record yesterday. The President's message is due next week.

The long-promised defense housing project for the District which will be of particular interest to Government employes—since it will be reserved almost exclusively for them—is expected to be announced over the weekend or next week at the latest. The announcement will come from the Office of Charles Palmer, defense housing coordinator. The project here will be a "model" for the Nation.

Many employes are complaining bitterly about the promotion ban. They have been offered better jobs elsewhere but they can't get released from their agencies. Here's a loophole through which you may get released: During World War I President Wilson issued an executive order which gave the Civil Service Commission authority to recertify employes who weren't assigned to work for which they had qualified. That order is still on the books and it can be invoked at anytime.

Typical case: A person is certified by the commission to an agency for a stenographic position. The agency doesn't assign the person to stenographic work. Or the person may be given stenographic work for awhile and later be transferred to the file room or some other spot. That person may file a complaint with the Civil Service Commission and the commission will place the name of the person back on the eligible register for certification elsewhere. In fact the commission would be delighted to do just that in the case of a stenographer since it is hardly able to fill the demands.

New Civil Service registers: Translator, 5569 eligibles; a junior calculating machine operator, 5907 eligibles . . . Francis de Sales Ryan is doing her bit to train new Government gals. She has written a booklet "The Private Secretary in an Executive Office" which is full of tips on speech, dress and other qualifications for a successful secretary. Miss Ryan is secretary to F. F. Bartelt, Treasury's commissioner of accounts. Her booklet is being distributed free to new additions to the department's secretarial force.

Maxton, N. C., Nov. 27 (UP).—Private Anthony Joseph Mrozinski, 22, member of the 502d Parachute Battalion, made a jump over Maxton today and landed on a house, but "you can't kill a Polack" and his only injury was a bruised leg. "The only thing I was worrying about," Tony said, "was that if I got badly hurt I couldn't go home for Christmas."

Green Assails Compulsory Arbitration Plan As 'Slavery,' Says Labor Might Have to 'Rebel'

TESTIMONIAL DINNER for Fred S. Walker (right), editor of the Trades Unionist, and a member of the D. C. Minimum Wage and Accident Prevention Board, was staged last night in the Mayflower Hotel. Shown with Walker are William Green (center), A. F. L. president, and John Deviny, toastmaster

Lashing out at members of Congress who desire to impose restrictive legislation upon organized labor during the defense emergency, President William Green of the American Federation of Labor last night charged that legislation providing for compulsory arbitration of labor disputes would violate the Thirteenth Amendment to the Constitution prohibiting slavery.

Restrictive legislation would be a "blow at freedom" and would force labor to "rebel," he said.

Green spoke at a testimonial dinner in honor of Fred S. Walker, editor of the Trades Unionist, and member of the D. C. Minimum Wage and Accident Prevention Board. More than 400 representatives of organized labor, civic groups and friends attended the dinner at Hotel Mayflower.

Militancy Is Urged

The A. F. L. head was joined in his opposition to antilabor legislation by other speakers including Senator Henrik Shipstead (Republican), of Minnesota, and Representative Thomas E. Scanlon (Democrat), of Pennsylvania.

Senator Shipstead urged labor to remain "militant and not stoop to conquer."

"Labor has succeeded only when it has not bowed to power," he said. "Labor cannot afford to pay anything to Congress or anyone else for its rights. As long as labor does not beg bread from its friends or ask mercy from its enemies, it will survive."

Representative Scanlon declared that present sentiment in Congress in favor of restrictive labor legislation was a result of "labor's mistake" in securing pro-labor legislation to protect it. He predicted that "labor's friends" in Congress would be able to block any effort to enforce compulsory arbitration.

Will Give Best Skill

Raising his voice to a shout, Green asserted, "I protest any attempt of the lawmakers to shackle labor and rob it of its freedom.

"We will do all a generous public expects labor to do if we are permitted to do it voluntarily," Green said.

"Then, members of organized labor will give their best skill and training in defense of America. If the same men are told they must, then, like any other human beings, they will rebel.

"The A. F. of L. has adopted a no strike policy in defense production. We have lost less time than the people in England who are at war. It will be unfortunate if they pass antistrike legislation. It will be a blow at freedom just when we are trying to preserve freedom as a priceless heritage."

Green's presence at the testimonial to Walker, who is a veteran member of Columbia Typographical Union, No. 101, occasioned some surprise in labor circles because of the present strained relations between the International Typographical Union and the A. F. of L.

The printers, one of the oldest groups in the A. F. of L., walked out in 1939, after a bitter fight over an assessment levied by the A. F. of L., which the typographers claimed infringed on their autonomy. One reason the assessment was bitterly fought was the belief that it was to be used to fight the rival C. I. O.

Last night Green issued an invitation to the "typos" to return to the A. F. L. and end the breach. A. E. Giegengack, United States Public Printer and a "typo," made the same plea, and expressed the hope that they reaffiliate before Green retires from the presidency of the A. F. L.

John B. Dickman, sr., member of Columbia Typographical Union for more than 61 years, made the principal address, a formal tribute to Walker. John J. Deviny, Deputy Public Printer, was toastmaster.

16 Rugged States Observe Thanksgiving

Thanksgiving in Washington yesterday amounted to something that happened last week.

The President's proclaimed day, November 20, got all of the attention and formal outpouring of thanks; yesterday, the traditional Thanksgiving Day, was largely ignored here by all but the All-States Club of the Y. W. C. A., which held its annual Thanksgiving dinner at 6:30 p. m. at 614 E Street Northwest, and the House of Representatives, which adjourned.

The hotels reported that their Thanksgiving business was done last week. But 16 States clung to the last Thursday tradition—Georgia, Arkansas, Delaware, Florida, Iowa, Kansas, Montana, Nebraska, Nevada, New Hampshire, Oklahoma, Pennsylvania, South Dakota, Tennessee, Texas and Vermont.

Things occurred: At Springfield, Ga., a flock of turkeys crossed the Savannah & Atlanta Railway tracks near Turkey Creek while a freight train approached. Feathers flew. Two section hands got turkey for dinner, on the traditional day.

A Tulsa, Okla., housewife, preparing giblet gravy, discovered that no liver accompanied the turkey she had bought. Grabbing a telephone she told the turkey's raiser out in the nearby country what she thought of a man who would deliver a turkey without a liver. The abashed poutryman killed another turkey and drove 10 miles into town with the liver to satisfy the demand.

In Iceland American occupational forces ate turkey, turkey trimmings and pumpkin pie yesterday. The meal was planned for last week and was postponed when the turkeys failed to arrive. Barring routine, necessary duty, all men received yesterday off.

Out at Beltsville, Md., Daniel Cave, who provided the President with a 22.6-pound turkey last week, said yesterday he had another weighing 30½ pounds the President also could get, if he wanted it. The President, it was announced, plans to carve a turkey at a huge dinner tomorrow in Warm Springs, Ga.

Western High Parents Seek Improvements

Nearly 300 members of the Home and School Association of Western High School, adopted unanimously a resolution last night condemning "the deterioration of the building facilities of Western High School" as "symbolic of a deterioration of the sense of civic responsibility of our citizenship, our school organizations, and our legislative bodies."

The resolution called upon the citizens organizations of Georgetown to join with the Home and School Association in demanding that Congress earmark $300,000 for the rehabilitation of the building. Col. H. C. Holdridge, president of the association, pointed out that this figure is the Board of Education's estimate of the sum required to put the Western High Building into a condition comparable to the condition of the other high schools in the District.

Officers and noncommissioned officers of the Western High School Cadet Regiment served as guides on the tour of the building.

At a business meeting before the tour of the building, the association elected A. L. Eskey, Westchester Apartments, personnel manager of the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co., as vice president of the association. Eskey is a member of the school committee of the Washington Board of Trade.

Students representing various clubs and other organized activities of the school, presented an entertainment program as the opening feature of the meeting.

M. T. Wiegand Heads New Kiwanis Staff

Martin T. Wiegand, prominent Washington lumber dealer, yesterday was elected president of the Kiwanis Club of Washington at the Mayflower Hotel. He succeeds Dr. Oscar B. Hunter.

WIEGAND

A native of Washington, Wiegand was graduated from the University of Pennsylvania in 1922. He entered the lumber business soon afterward and became interested in civic affairs here. He is 40 years old, married to a Washington woman and has four children: Martin, 13; Barbara, 11; Elizabeth, 9, and Anna, 7. The Wiegands live at 3056 Ellicott Street Northwest.

Other officers elected were: Raymond F. Garrity, 4716 Blagden Terrace Northwest, first vice president; W. Herbert Gill, 1519 Twentieth Street Northwest, second vice president, and John J. Boobar, 3321 Wisconsin Avenue Northwest, past president and charter member of the Kiwanis Club of Washington, high sheriff.

Named to the directors committee are: William F. Nelson, Dr. David L. Maxwell, Channing S. Walker, James A. Cassidy, John G. Scharf, J. Wriley Jacobs, Edward C. Baltz, Dr. Arnold McNitt and William E. Davis.

Guest Speaker Paul H. Guernsey, assistant managing director of the District of Columbia Tuberculosis Association of Washington, outlined in his talk the main tuberculosis problems facing the District and what the association is doing to solve them.

Tiny Bette Gay Snoozes On—She's '20' Now

Tiny Bette Gay Bonbrest, snug as a bug in a rug, yesterday snoozed into her twentieth day of life in an incubator at George Washington Hospital.

The "wonder baby," who entered this world weighing only 26½ ounces, is in good condition and eating well, her physician, Dr. Alfred J. Steinberg, said. Bette has not been weighed since birth, but Dr. Steinberg hopes to put her on the scales when she is one month old.

D. C. Guild to Invest In Defense Bonds

The Washington Newspaper Guild at its monthly meeting Wednesday in the District Building adopted a resolution to invest one-fourth of its reserve funds in defense asving bonds, Barney Taylor, president, has announced.

Chest Drive Gains 80% Of Goal

Renewed Vigor Pledged to Gain Total Before Next Report Meeting

Driving hard to reach their two million dollar goal before another report meeting on Tuesday, Community Chest volunteer campaigners yesterday reported total subscriptions of $1,601,630.73, or 80.08 per cent of the goal.

The workers' total report of subscriptions for the day was $360,774.48 more than on any previous day of the campaign. The Westmoreland team of Montgomery County moved 300 per cent beyond its quota, and the public schools went 25 per cent over.

Another report meeting will be held Tuesday at 12:30 p. m. in the Willard Hotel ballroom. To the meeting yesterday Maj. Edward J. Kelly, superintendent of the Metropolitan Police Department, brought commendations for the Chest's activities and an appeal for increased recognition of the Washington traffic hazards.

WINS TROPHY—Cheer-leading coeds from George Washington, Maryland and American Universities went through their paces last night on the Capitol Theater stage. Barbara England, of Maryland, got the best reaction from the audience and won the Linda Darnell trophy. Here, Art Brown, theater organist and radio artist, presents the award to Miss England

High School Singers Present Fine Performance of 'Pinafore'

Glee Clubs of Theodore Roosevelt High School present Gilbert and Sullivan's "H. M. S. Pinafore, or the Lass That Loved a Sailor" on Thursday night in the school auditorium.

Last evening's performance of "H. M. S. Pinafore" by the glee clubs of Theodore Roosevelt High School proved what a convenient medium a Gilbert and Sullivan operetta can be for a group of young people who want to put their musical training to the uses of entertainment for themselves and others. Because of the obvious spirit of cooperation, the frank freedom from professional ambition and the evidence of careful preparation, it was the jolliest production of the 63-year-old comedy that it has been my pleasure to witness for a long time. It had a spontaneity and a freshness that no company of troupers could reproduce, for routine cannot imitate the zest of amateurs or their engaging blend of confidence and self-consciousness.

BROWN

The universal application of the text is what makes the operetta particularly useful for amateurs, who can have as much fun as the auditors. Members of the glee clubs did enjoy themselves last evening, whether they were cast as principals or choristers, and no one seemed to be concerned with the possibility of becoming a great singer. For that reason, I am sure that no rankling jealousies will be aroused by the comment that Phyllis Schwartz, as Josephine, disclosed a voice of very agreeable quality.

The ease of the performance, reflected credit up on the directors, Emma Louise Thompson. As for the staging, including the neat and effective decor contrived with a minimum of materials, that was a cooperative success wrought by Norma Rose, Mr. V. D. Rickert, William Moyer, John Gavin, John Farlee, Bernard Patten, Horace Waite, Arthur Gellman, Walter Tolson, Charles Leedham, John Woodward, Robert Brown and Bernard Shaw.

Cab Drivers Polled on 12 Rate Plans

Asked to Indicate Preferences in Survey Conducted By Trade Weekly

District cab drivers were asked to designate which of 12 rate plans they prefer in a poll announced last night in "Taxitalk," weekly publication of the Cab Drivers Union.

The poll directly attacks the problem of reducing the size of the first taxi zone by including six plans which would require the size of the first zone to be reduced with zone boundaries rearranged and a fifth zone added. Six other choices involve plans to retain the present zone boundaries, changing only the rates.

A corollary question considered is elimination of the socalled "free zone" which occurs when a cab re-enters an original zone after going into a second zone.

A sample ballot printed in the publication which will be distributed to 2,000 drivers today asserts that the public, cab drivers, and the Public Utilities Commission have been confused by differences of opinion on taxi rates.

The choice placed at the head of the ballot called for retention of the present "temporary" 30-cent single zone rate with a zone ratio of 30-40-60-80 cents established. This rate was placed in effect for a "trial" period by the P. U. C. at a recent public hearing.

According to Editor William J. Bukovac, the results will be tabulated in about a week with the information gathered to be used as evidence to present before the P. U. C.

Other four-zone rate ratios outlined in the ballot include the following: 30-40-60-80 cents with free zone eliminated; 30-50-70-90 cents with free zone and with free zone eliminated; the old rate of 20-40-60-80 cents with the free zone; and the old rate with the free zone eliminated.

Five zone proposals involving smaller first zones include the following: 20-30-50-70-90 cents with choice as to free zone; 25-35-50-70-90 cents with choice as to free zone; and 20-30-40-60-80 cents with choice as to free zone.

Red Cross Calls for Workers

An appeal for more workers in sewing units and other production work for the Bethesda branch of the Montgomery County Chapter, American Red Cross was made yesterday by Mrs. James C. Dulin, jr., production chairman.

The number of women enrolled in these services, Mrs. Dulin said, has not kept pace with the enlargement in population of the Bethesda area. "While it is known that many local women are working in various phases of vital Red Cross activities, there is a pitifully small group of faithful helpers producing sewed and knitted garments, of which the branch has a huge quota, Mrs. Dulin stated.

Argentina Signs Pact to Sell U. S. Entire Tungsten Output

By the Associated Press

Buenos Aires, Nov. 27.—Argentina agreed today to sell to the United States her entire tungsten production for three years, thus assuring North American defense industries a steady supply of this war-important material and, in effect, denying it to the Axis.

The chief sufferer will be Japan which has been taking about half of the Argentine production. The agreement was in keeping with the United States policy of purchasing supplies of strategic materials from other American states.

Argentina, which this year has mined nearly 2000 tons of tungsten ore, or wolframite, is the third largest producer in the hemisphere, after the United States and Bolivia, and the seventh largest in the world.

Tungsten-hardened steel has the highest heat resistant qualities of any steel alloy.

The agreed price for the ore is $21 a ton. Most of the world's supply, which comes from China, has been selling at $24 to $26 in New York. World production has been estimated at 28,000 tons annually.

Agreements also are in force with Mexico, covering practically all that country's mineral production; with Brazil for manganese, bauxite and industrial diamonds; with Bolivia for tungsten and tin; and Chile is sending most of its copper to the United States without a formal agreement.

The dispatching of United States troops this week to Dutch Guiana put another important raw material, bauxite, source of aluminum, under North American protection.

TALENT BY THE CARLOAD is being unearthed at the Neptune Room's "Talent Try-Outs" on Tuesday eves. From the number of smart entertainers entering these events, you'd think that talent is lurking in every office and school in town . . . Crowds of customers have discovered that the "Talent Try-Outs" offer a happy combination of vaudeville show and Roman circus. The Neptune is jampacked by the time the show starts. Every "artist" seems to accumulate a crowd of fans. And do they say things about the judges (and not sweet nothings) if they don't agree with the selections! . . . The cake was taken last Tuesday by the Arnold Trio, which includes Pops Arnold and his two boys. But it was nip-and-tuck between the Arnolds and redheaded Jack Miller who has a natural Jimmy Cagney smile and ways, works at the Bureau of Engraving when he isn't practicing songs . . . See you in the Neptune come Tuesday.

Carmen Cavallaro, of the Cosmos Room, has been informed that his new record albums will probably not make the music stores until early in January. And with all these people wanting to buy them for Christmas presents!

ONE SOLDIER IS SEVEN in the unpredictable and delightful show at the new Balalaika. We're speaking of the skit wherein by a scenic trick four Russian soldiers look like a troop, fill the whole Balalaika stage. As Washington's one theater-restaurant, the Balalaika is unique. Tabloid sketches in the "Chauve-Souris" manner are presented on the stage. But Dancers Yourlo and Yodo and Singer Dena Larena step out on the central dance floor to perform. The final "Gypsy Camp" is a spinning kaleidoscope of color, melody and whirling dancers.

THE ALPHABETS aren't the private possession of new Government setups, says Maestro Layton Bailey, of the Metronome Room, who recently noted dancing groups of OPMers, PCAers (Pennsylvania Central Airline) and NBCers (National Broadcasting Co.), not to mention M. Ds. and M. Cs. (Members of Congress).

RIVIERA'S COLORFUL CROWD recently included too-beautiful Ruth Hurley dancing with Jimmy Campion . . . Meredith Howard, of the melodious radio voice, being squired by Senor de la Riva . . . Mr. and Mrs. James O'Grady celebrating her birthday . . . Kay Ford, of WINX . . . Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Meachen with Madelon Best and Harry Pittman.

Evelyn Knight, of the King Cole Room, will leave for Florida about December 15. Her singing chores will be taken over by Bob Pace who's scoring finely with the fastidious K. C. R. clientele.

ACCOMPLISHED MISCHA. Besides being a pattern of sauve cordiality, Greeter Mischa, of the Troika, is a connoisseur of classical music, has a collection of 1700 recordings including many by the late and great Chaliapin. And that isn't all! Mischa's also an artist in hand painting silk in the Russian manner. He's going to paint 15 yards of silk to make a dazzling costume for Dancer Conchita. No wonder Conchita is dedicating her number, "For You I Break My Neck" to Mischa.

Burton's Columbia Heights new dinner and dance spot at 1419 Irving Street Northwest opens tonight. Music by Burton's own orchestra.

PAUL KAIN,
Mayfair's "triple-threat melody man." He's a leader, saxophonist and clarinetist many show people always drop in for the late show and visit around with each other . . . Ditto for the Plymouth where you'll always see many musicians listening to the Gypsies play the kind of music preferred by musicians . . . Ditto for the Madrillon where a very special Sunday night crowd always gathers to start the week with Carr and Don.

The town's floweriest name belongs to Iris Heather, now singing verra prettily with Ralph Hawkins' Band at the Crossroads.

AROUND AND ABOUT. At Burt's Trans-Lux and found Proprietor Burt Lopatin all pleased about converting his attractive missus into a hockey fan . . . To the Rainbow Room and saw Jimmy Byrnes, president of the A. F. of L. union of Government employes, with his lovely bride, the former Miss Rosalie Jacobs, of California . . . At the Pall Mall we found Mrs. Lillian Ciros, lady C. P. A., of Chicago, lunching with her Government career girl friends, Tracy Strohecker (OPM), Evelyn Steinkman (PHS) and Betty Ferro (FCC) . . . To the Shoreham and there were blond Helen Vogt and Jon Sobotka figuring out the high spots in that monumental millinery style luncheon they're staging tomorrow . . . To the Versailles for a spot of Jack Fernandez' rumba music and he told us how New York people are always mistaking him for Nano Rodriguez, though we still think he looks more like Errol Flynn.

THE PERFECT COUNTRY HOME, we hear, is the new one of Conrad Siebold, partner in Restaurant "823." It includes a rose garden, rock garden, a flagged terrace with outdoor fireplace, a purling brook and pool, a playground, a vegetable garden screened by evergreens, a wild garden and woods. Sounds like Eden.

LISTENABLE AND DANCEABLE. Jack (Jive) Shaffer's rocketing rhythms at the Casino Royal. It's dance music with that dizzy lift . . . The Copocabana combo of conga drum, muted trumpet, guitar and piano. This is South American rhythm with an undefinable Manhattan touch . . . The witty songs and bright music of Don Carper's five in the Cafe Caprice. Don writes most of those risque snappers that convulse Caprice midnighters . . . The smoothie dance music that rolls from the Viking bandstand, the only one in town surmounted by an authentic ship's mast with rigging . . . There's no dancing in Hi Hat, but if there were you could waltz around gaily to the nice harmonies of the Cavaliers which also provide perfect background for Carmela Lazari's soprano.

Cynthia Cavanaugh, new singer in the Mayflower Lounge, has been in Washington before. She tells us that, draped in sequins, she had two lines in "You Never Know," big musical at the National Theater two seasons ago.

STRICTLY DELICIOUS. The oysters casino at Olmsted's. And the chicken potpie is a wonderful palate pleaser, too . . . O'Donnell's Farmhouse trims up their fine fried chicken dinners with crackling corn sticks and wonderfully prepared vegetables . . . The filet mignon and sirloin steak at the Plymouth. After one of 'em, your husband will be a pushover for that Christmas shopping money . . . The crab meat and Smithfield ham Norfolk style at Hogate's. A gourmet's item.

SINGERS ALL are Jack Maggio's bandsmen at the Nightingale. Every lad of 'em joins in the vocal background of such numbers as "Yes, Indeed." Featured singers of the band are Jivester Tommy Bingley and Blave Sickles who does the romancing numbers.

Young Journalists Meet at G. W. U. Conference Today

Approximately 200 high school journalists and their publication advisers from nearby States and the District will meet at George Washington University today in an all-day conference led by prominent local newspapermen.

Eugene Meyer, editor and publisher of The Post, will make an off-the-record talk tonight at the conference dinner in the National Press Club. At the dinner prizes will be awarded for the best news story, the best sports story, the best feature and the best editorial, and the best column carried in the high school newspapers submitted for competition.

Dr. Cloyd Heck Marvin, president of the university, will welcome the delegates at 10:30 a. m., after which talks will be given by Raymond Clapper, Scripps-Howard columnist; B. M. McKelway, managing editor of the Evening Star, and Frank Waldrop, political commentator of the Times-Herald.

You Meet the Most Interesting People

New York (AP).—Fred Maisch, sound engineer of a phonograph record company in this city, says that in 31 years of the work he has noticed that almost every star, when recording, shows some idiosyncracy or nervousness. Some examples he gives:

William Primrose, violinist, rehearses without coat or tie—but insists on being well groomed during an actual recording.

John Jacob Niles stands on his head before singing—to get a nasal tone in American folk songs.

Larson Ends Coaching Career Saturday

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

A dozen Washington high school boys with football ability that earned them places on the All-High team have been given a brutal brush-off by the office of Dr. Frank A. Ballou, superintent of schools. These kids have been told they can't play against a Richmond, Va., All-High team in a charity game at Richmond tomorrow.

POVICH

For 10 days most of the boys have been hanging around the practice sessions of the All-Metropolitan team at Griffith Stadium, prayerfully hoping the school officials would relent. They've been standing on the sidelines, aching for action on the team that, without them, is comprised of Catholic and suburban schoolboys whose principals haven't objected to the charity game. In each case they have the permission of their parents to play with the Washington team, but Dr. Ballou's office says "no."

They've been threatened with the loss of the football letters they won if they play in the Richmond game. One boy has been told that if he joins the team his school will forfeit all the games it won in the high school series. Another brave kid has said, in effect, "to heck with the superintendent' office," and has taken his place on the squad.

'Would Make Boys Conceited'

The superintendent's office won't unbend despite (1) the pleas of the boys' parents, (2) the charity aspect of the game and (3) favorable rulings on such games in the past. All of a sudden they have decided to enforce a rule against such games after giving their blessings to violations in the past.

Assistant Superintendent Chester W. Holmes, who has Dr. Ballou's ear, pointed out that the rule against high school boys' participation in these games has been in the books for several years, and then gratuitously stated his own ideas on the subject. "I object," said Mr. Holmes "to these All-Star teams because they tend to make the boys conceited." Of that, it would seem the boys' parents would be a better judge.

There has been nothing consistent in the school people's stand on All-Star games. In 1936 a team of High School All-Stars received permission to play a Mexico City high school team in a post-season game. The next year there was permission for an All-High team to play Monroe, Ga., A. and M. here in a benefit game after the season had ended. For several years the rule has been lifted to permit the champion basketball team to play in post-season tournaments. All of a sudden, as we were saying, the school people have cracked down.

Actually the game at Richmond tomorrow won't be a post-season game, inasmuch as the end of the season was arbitrarily set by the school people for November 30. Thus objection to the game is out on that score, but the school people have another rule handy in which they can take refuge. That latter rule forbids participation of high school boys in "outside" games during the school football season. Nine days ago the city title was decided in the Central-Anacostia game, but because Western High is playing a game at Atlantic City tomorrow the season is held not yet ended.

Game Keeps Boys Off Sandlots

Dozens of high school boys play sandlot football after their school schedule ends, which is technically against the rules, but there is no record yet of the school people taking any action to forfeit their letters. And now when the boys want to perform under capable coaches, with strict supervision and on a field that isn't littered with broken bottles and tin cans, the school people crack down.

The fact is that tomorrow's game at Richmond received the complete approval of Hardy Pearce, acting director of physical education in the schools, who thought it was a swell idea. Pearce was cooperating handsomely in the game until the school people reminded him he was only the acting director and made him quit the project.

Interest in high school athletics in Washington has been something of a city shame for many years now, and the evidence is that the school fathers have been no great help in improving it. In Richmond this season a game between two of the city's high schools drew a crowd of 22,000 fans. In Washington, the average crowd at a high school game is no more than 2,000, meaning that the football teams don't even draw all of its student body. The best crowd at a Washington school game this year was the 8,500 who attended the Gonzaga-St. John's contest, not a public high game. There seems to be something less than a frenzy of interest in Washington high school athletics and one reason seems to be the school fathers. Boy, open a window, please. It's stuffy in here.

With CONSIDINE

New York, Nov. 27.—Sportin' around:

Negotiations for that new pro tennis tour are being held up by the manager of one of the amateurs propositioned. The manager has been cutting this fair-haired son of the U. S. L. T. A. for 25 per cent of his earnings as a simon-pure, and now wants the same split of the fellow's pro earnings . . . Alexis Thompson, the pro football team owner, believes that the most sought-after collegian at the annual draft meeting next month will be (for the first time) a lineman—Duquesne's great center, Demao . . . That Japanese emissary Kurusu, who said "I hope we are able to score a touchdown," on his arrival here for conferences, is the same gentleman who kicked baseball out of Japan not long ago.

CONSIDINE

Alsab, ready to go back into training when he reaches Hialeah next week, is now insured for $100,000—which is $99,300 more than he cost the Al Sabaths. The premium was $4,000 for the first year . . . Tommy O'Brien, Beaumont sportscaster, has become gubernatorial timber because he was the only one to predict a Southwestern Conference title for the Texas Aggies—before the season opened . . . Get a load of Wallace Wade, acting "hard to get." Coy . . . Wonder if Biff Jones will be able to stay at Nebraska. It must have taken a lot of pressure to keep him there, when the Army wanted him back in uniform.

If Bos'n's Mate Georgie Abrams wins the first undisputed middleweight title tonight at the Garden, where he meets Tony Zale, the village of Hot Springs, Ark., must be credited with an assist. For it was there, several years ago, that Abrams battled back to health after his back had been broken in a fight with Steve Mamakos. Doctors said he'd never fight again and might not walk again. He was sent to Hot Springs by Bo Bregman, Washington sportsman, who footed his bills for months. During his recuperation he blew up to 195 pounds, then slowly started the comeback that has led him up to his big chance Friday night to become the only middleweight since Mickey Walker with a clear claim to the title.

The hero of last Sunday's great Giants-Redskins game among the players, was Jim Poole, Giants' end. He doped out the play that led to his intercepting a Sam Baugh pitch that led to the Giants winning touchdown . . . Leo Durocher, who steered Brooklyn to its feverish and prosperous pennant, may get a pay cut. He was trying to avoid same when he made that announcement the other day that he would play, as well as manage, next year. Leo makes about $20,000 now—only $25,000 less than Bill Terry. . . . Jawn Kimbrough will kiss the bully-boys goodby, when the New York Americans wind up their season in New York next Sunday against Cincinnati. He'll be on a plane, Hollywood bound, a few hours after the game's last play. . . . It was a fine year for Open Champion Craig Wood, and P. G. A. Champ Vic Ghezzi. Wood's income, directly traceable to his championship (for the winning of which there is only a $1000 purse) may reach $50,000.

Navy Mentor Is Relieved Of Grid Post

Never Lost to Army As Player or Coach; John E. Welchel May Be Successor

By the Associated Press

Annapolis, Md., Nov. 27.—Saturday's Army-Navy football classic at Philadelphia climaxes the Naval Academy coaching career of Maj. Emery (Swede) Larson, U. S. M. C., who is yet to experience defeat by Army as player or mentor.

Larson, trying for his third and final victory over the Cadets, will be relieved of his duties here next month as head gridiron mentor and commanding officer of the academy's Marine detachment, Capt. T. Starr King, academy athletic director, announced late today.

King said Larson's gridiron successor had not yet been selected. It has been reported that Commander John E. Welchel, U. S. N., assistant backfield coach, is receiving serious consideration as Larson's possible successor.

Welchel, who played quarterback on Navy's eleven under Coach Gil Dobie and was a teammate of Commander L. S. Perry, present graduate manager of athletics, came here last July. He was graduated in 1919 and was assistant football mentor from 1919 to 1924. He has coached athletic teams in the fleet and at the Norfolk operating base.

Larson, whose new post has not yet been announced, reported here in June, 1938 as commanding officer of the Marine detachment. The following December he succeeded Lieut. Hank Hardwick, U. S. N., as head football coach.

Larson's 1939 and 1940 elevens licked Army 10-0 and 14-0 and his present team is favored to win the forty-second service clash Saturday. His current squad has chalked up the best record of any of his outfits, having won six, lost one and tied one.

Coached in Hawaii

The retiring mentor played center on Navy's eleven in 1919, 1920 and 1921, the only three consecutive years in the Army-Navy football rivalry that the Midshipmen whipped the Cadets.

Larson, one of the academy's outstanding athletes, was captain of the 1921 squad and was named to Walter Camp's second All-America team that year. He also was selected in 1922 on the first All-America lacrosse team ever chosen. Upon his graduation in 1922 he received the Thompson Trophy Cup, emplematic of athletci excellence.

Larson has been closely connected with football ever since his graduation. In 1922, 1923 and 1924 he played with the All-Marine team at Quantico and in 1925 and 1926 played on and coached the Parris Island Marine eleven.

The following fall he was head coach of the All-Navy team in Hawaii. In 1928 he was line coach of the University of Hawaii. After spending two years in Nicaragua, he returned to Parris Island in 1931 and again coached the team there.

Larson led the 1935 and 1936 U. S. S. Pennsylvania eleven to two consecutive fleet championships.

Babe Young's Plea On Status Rejected

New York, Nov. 27 (AP).—The Daily Mirror says Norman (Babe) Young, star first baseman of the New York Giants, has been classified 1-A by his Selective Service board and a plea that he was the support of his father has been fejected by an appeal board.

The paper said Young would be subject to call by the Army after the first of the year.

Young could not be reached at his home here for comment.

Service Game Top Contest Tomorrow

By Eddie Dooley

Famous Football Expert

The Army-Navy football classic is always worth traveling a long way to see, but this year it shapes up as one of the most interesting, well balanced and colorful gridiron battles of a thrilling season. When the service teams meet tomorrow in the vast Municipal Stadium at Philadelphia, they will be playing to the largest audience of the campaign.

It is a happy coincidence that in this year when the Nation is more cognizant than it has ever been, of the need for a strong Army and Navy, the football representatives of both branches of the service are unusually strong. Navy has beaten William and Mary, Virginia, Lafayette, Cornell, Pennsylvania and Princeton. Only Notre Dame, which a week before had been held to a scoreless tie by Army, was able to overpower the Midshipmen.

Army has to its credit victories over The Citadel, Virginia Military Institute, Columbia and West Virginia. The Cadets lost to Harvard and Penn. Earl Blaik's West Pointers reached their higest peak of the season in the battle with Notre Dame. They played almost perfect football that day, and it is no exaggeration to say they outplayed the South Bend eleven almost every minute of the game.

There is a feeling that Coach

Navy Team Given Rousing Sendoff

Entire Regiment Rallies Around Bonfire On Farragut Field; Team Primed for Army

By the Associated Press

Annapolis, Md., Nov. 27.—Confident of a victory over Army Saturday at Philadelphia, Navy's high-spirited regiment gave its football warriors a rousing send-off tonight as they entrained for the Manufacturers' Country Club at Oreland, Pa.

The entire regiment of more than 3000 midshipmen, rallying around a huge bonfire on Farragut Field, virtually shook the foundations of academy buildings with cheers, yells and lusty victory songs.

"Beat the Army Gray" and "Up Anchors" reverberated throughout the reservation as the jubilant Middies, some wearing coats backwards, followed the squad of 41 players to the academy's gates.

Middie Headcoach Swede Larson, who will step down as Navy's gridiron boss next month, said his pigskin outht was "primed for the Cadets," who are trying for their first service triumph since 1938.

Boothe Ailing

He said all his boys, except Sammy Boothe, regular high halfback of Evanston, Wyo., who hurt his shoulder last week, were in top shape for the forty-second Service contest, to be witnessed by 98,000 fans.

Larson said he would start his first team, captained by Bob Froude, 175-pound end, of San Bernardino, Calif. Bob Woods, 184-pounder, of Corning, N. Y., will replace Boothe in the starting backfield, he added. John Hill, 175-pound guard, of Akron,

Arkansas Scores Over Tulsa, 13-6

By the Associated Press

Tulsa, Nov. 27.—Max Sallings, a loose-hipped 160-pound second-string halfback, took charge in the moment of Arkansas' greatest peril today to lead the Razorbacks to a 13-6 triumph over Tulsa's Golden Hurricane, its bitter Thanksgiving Day rival.

A crowd of 17,000 that filled Skelly Stadium to overflowing saw the big, red-clad giants from the Ozarks beat down Tulsa's great passing attack and break a seven-game winning streak.

Tulsa, trailing 7-0 at halftime, had struck back savagely with one 63-yeard touchdown drive and was again on the offensive when Sallings went in to replace Chic Forte. Quickly, Sallings led the Razorbacks to another touchdown, then sparked a vicious ground attack that kept Hurricane on the defense until the final gun.

Arkansas took the lead midway in the second period as R. C. Pitts, big Razorback end, broke through to block a punt by Cal Purdin on the Tulsa 30. The ball bounded crazily back to the 4, where Arkansas took possession. On fourth down, Forte nudged it across and David Scarborough converted.

The Hurricane opened up with its aerial weapon at the start of the third. A pass from Glenn Dobbs to his brother, Bob, made one first down at midfield and from there Rangy Glenn pitched to Saxon Judd, who was hit down on the Arkansas 4. On fourth down Blocking Back Joe Gibson crashed through tackle for his first touchdown of the season. Hugh Goerner failed to convert.

Jack Crain Paces 23-0 Victory

40,000 Fans See Texas A.&M. Stopped Cold; Eight-Game Streak Snapped

By the Associated Press

College Station, Tex., Nov.—Cold, brutal Texas blasted Texas A. and M. off football's glory road today in a bewildering reversal of form and a startling repetition of Southwest Conference history.

The hitherto undefeated, untied Aggies fell 23-0 before the Longhorns as stumpy Jack Crain sang his swan song in conference play with a rhythm of swishing feet.

Last Thanksgiving Day, A. and M. was undefeated and untied and had 19 straight victories behind it. Crain stepped in as field general for Texas that day and sent the twice-beaten Longhorns to a 7-0 decision that ranks as one of the great upsets of college football history.

Today A. and M. entered the traditional game with eight straight wins, holding the Southwest Conference championship and boasting one of the finest records in the Nation, 28 victories in 29 games.

Once-beaten, once-tied Texas, which tumbled out of the Nation's No. 1 ranking 12 days ago when deadlocked by lowly Baylor, came back to reach the heights of play that had branded the Longhorns the greatest team in Southwest Conference history.

Behind the great Crain, the Orange Wave engulfed the Aggies in one of the most crushing defeats in the 48-year-old series.

And in so doing Texas won its second game in history at College Station and its first on present Kyle Field.

A crowd of 40,000—largest ever to see a game here—jammed the stands.

The Aggies never seriously threatened the Texas goal and advanced but once to scoring territory. That drive was stopped on the Longhorn 30.

Kicks Field Goal

Crain kicked a field goal to break the ice in the second period. It came dramatically with only 55 seconds before the end of the half. Pudgy Jack stepped back on the 18 and plunked the ball through the goal posts from an angle.

In less than six minutes Texas had 13 more points.

With the third period only two minutes old Crain whipped around right end and sauntered across unhindered for a touchdown. He missed the try for point.

Coach Bible Shoots for Dec. 6; Not a Bowl Bid

By the Associated Press

College Station, Tex., Nov. 27.—Bowl talk was all but stifled after today's Texas (23) Texas Aggies (0) football game.

One jubilant Longhorn player cried out "If we don't wind up in the Rose Bowl there ain't no justice," but Coach D. X. Bible, himself trembling with excitement, interposed:

"Next Saturday we play Oregon (he meant December 6), and that's what we are shooting at. We have no plans beyond that."

"You just can't beat 'em if they play better ball than you do."

The Aggies have been invited to play in the Cotton Bowl in line with the custom of asking the conference champions, but Homer Norton, bald-pated coach, said drily:

"We haven't talked bowl games. We were bowled today."

All-Metropolitan Squad Leaves Today for Tobacco Bowl

18,000 Fans To See Game In Richmond

33 Players, Coaches Depart at 11, Drill At Richmond Field; Banquet Is Set

By Bill Burnett

Its two-week training grind now a thing of the past, an enthusiastic All-Metropolitan high school football squad today takes its leave of the home town, headed for a tangle with Richmond's outstanding scholastic stars in the seventh annual Tobacco Bowl clash tomorrow.

Trailing their heroes to Richmond later today and tomorrow morning will be a huge District of Columbia representation, expected by game time at 2:30 tomorrow to swell the Tobacco Bowl crowd to 18,000 fans.

Thirty-three players, Coach Gene Augusterfer and Managers Frank Verville and Paul Adkins will make up the entourage which will leave Griffith Stadium at 11 a. m. today. Immediately upon arrival in Richmond the squad will go through a light workout at the University of Richmond, have supper and then be split into three groups to appear on the Virginia city's three radio stations. A theater party will follow.

Price Gives Awards

On tomorrow's schedule, in addition to the first "bowl" battle ever entered by a Washington schoolboy team, is a sight-seeing tour in the morning and a grand scale banquet after the game. High spot during the latter event will be presentation of gold footballs to individuals of both the Washington and Richmond squads by Gov. James H. Price.

To Washington's young stars, picked by coaches of this vicinity for The Washington Post, the big game means one thing—a chance to defend the caliber of football played in the Nation's Capital. Their only regret is that the city's public schools, under orders from school authorities, will be helping them out with only one player.

Faced by the cream of the Thomas Jefferson and John Marshall High elevens, which lost only one game between them this year, Coach Augusterfer was far from fearful yesterday as his gang of stars took their last workout.

Strong Defense

"We may have quite a surprise for Richmond," the usually noncommittal mentor said. "These three teams we've put together here can go, and nobody can say they aren't strong defensively."

It may not be the team which starts, but yesterday's first-string lineup saw Elmer Raba, Tom Chisari, George McGowan and Steve Byrnes in the backfield, and on the line, reading in the usual order, Rayburn Newsom, Jim O'Keefe, Henry Grimm, Paul DiMeglio, Jack Evans, Francis Manilli and Curtis Cordell. It was a power-laden club, but stronger in only a few places than the second and third lineups.

To most of the local boys tomorrow's battle also means a chance to be seen by college football scouts, who annually flock to the biggest scholastic battle in this section. If Augusterfer's opinion serves, Washington can be proud of what scouts see on its contingent.

Sooners Drill Early To Celebrate Holiday

Norman, Okla., Nov. 27 (AP).—Oklahoma's Sooners took a light morning workout today so they could devote the afternoon to the more serious business of eating turkey.

Coach Dewey Luster moved up the drill to 9 a. m., then let his players devote the rest of the day to observing Thanksgiving.

Undefeated Olympics Tough Customers For Locals Despite Good Showing Tuesday

The powerful Boston Olympics, who are sweeping through Eastern Amateur League competition like a prairie fire, make their first appearance at Riverside Stadium tonight, at 8:30, in a match with the rejuvenated Washington Eagles.

Undefeated in seven matches during which they scored the startling total of 52 goals, the Olympics are now odds-on favorites to relieve Washington of the league championship.

The largest crowd of the season seems assured for tonight's match, largely because on last Tuesday the Eagles broke out in a scoring rash to break several league records as they trounced arch-rival Baltimore, 14-7.

In the spotlight will be a trio of Washington players, "Thin Men" Kenny Ullyot and Len Burrage, and stocky Paul Courteau, who to date have been the Eagles' offensive leaders.

Courteau, though he didn't score in the rout of Baltimore, is undoubtedly Washington's most dangerous scoring threat, and he will be the one that the Olympics must bottle up to win tonight. Ullyot, you will recall, scored four goals and an assist against Baltimore, while Burrage rung up three goals and a couple assists.

Stars of the Olympics include Center Danny Sullivan, Wingers Gerry Desrosiers and Ed Barru and Goalie Vic Polich, all of them American-born and holdovers from last year.

Washington will go into this match without the services of Tom McCormack, center and clever playmaker, who suffered a leg injury Tuesday. McCormack will be replaced on the active list by Donald Durno, towering wingman, who will play defense, moving Keith Allen from defense up to a forward line.

Lions Idle 6 Days, Meet Pittsburgh

Meantime the Washington Lions, idle from American Pro League competition until Sunday's match with Pittsburgh here, are using their six-day rest period to whip their cripples into shape.

At yesterday's practice all but two Lions were back in harness, the two exceptions being Capt. George Mantha and Lew Trudel, both wingers. Mantha is still favoring a bad leg, while Trudel is recuperating from a back injury.

Walter Zuke was at practice, though still weak from a recent illness, while Stan Rooke and Allen Shields are fast regaining top form after injury-enforced idleness.

New York, Nov. 27.—Those funny fistic frolics, better known as the muddleweight mess, go from the ridiculous to the sublime at last tomorrow night when Sailor Boy Georgie Abrams and Steelworker Tony Zale decide who's going to be the 160-pound boss.

When they finish their 15-round roughhouse in Madison Square Garden, the middleweight division will have an undisputed ruler for the first time since Mickey Walker was the No. 1 boy back there 11 years ago.

Since then there have been as many kinds of 160-pound rulers as garden varieties of tomatoes—and some of them fought about as good. The division has been kicked around between the National Boxing Association and the New York State Athletic Commission, with the International Boxing Union tossing in an occasional boot from overseas.

At times, when Marcel Thil's bald pate was in the picture, there were as many as three "world champions" hanging around at one time. Every set of fistic fathers took particular delight in keeping the faithful on the merry-go-round by naming its own titleholder.

Zale N. B. A. Boss

But when Billy Soose abdicated the New York State version of the title a few weeks ago, N. B. A. Prexy Abe Greene, the New York commission, and Promoter Mike Jacobs agreed on tomorrow night's brawl to get the silly set-up straightened out. At the moment, the N. B. A. recognizes Zale as boss, by direct descent from Al Hostak, Freddy Steele, Babe Risko, Teddy Yarosz and Vince Dundee. For a while, Steele held both New York and N. B. A. blessings, but when he refused to take on Fred Apostoli at the weight about three years ago, the local moguls brushed him off.

The latest wagering quotations put Abrams on top at 5 to 7, and the Forty-ninth Street gambling guys report brisker betting than for any fight this year. The edge for the sailor boy from Washington lies largely in the fact that he outgalloped Soose three times, while Soose topped Tony in an overweight meeting.

This corner strings along with Abrams to outspeed the rough, tough steelhand from Gary, Ind., (by way of Chicago) and finish on top over the 15-round route, despite the fact that the managerial firm of Sam Pian and Art Winch is noted for a reputation of never bringing a fighter into New York unless he's hot. You don't have to think back any farther than to Barney Ross for that one.

Blonde Wins Lady Mat Bout By Bouncing

Gladys Gillem, the Oklahoma cowgirl, earned another shot at the world's lady grappling championship when she soundly spanked buxom Carole Starr in the feature wrestling match at Turner's Arena last night. The Gillem gal, 130 pounds of peroxided fury, didn't take the match without suffering, however, but she did manage to toss Carole into the audience and bloody the classic Starr nose before applying the final body press to win after a stormy 12½ minutes.

Gladys was strictly business as when the opening whistle sounded she bounded across the enclosure like a lady after the last pair of nylons in town and clamped a headlock on Miss Starr. Carole threw this off and bounced the blonde on her tights. This shook Gladys to her foundation and when she finally got her breath she grimaced horribly. Her facial antics were made the more effective due to the fact that she had left one of her teeth in the dressing room.

This mugging bothered Carole not one whit and she added insult to injury by biting her way out of a head scissors. Then both put in a session of toe-to-toe slugging that carried them out of the ring and amongst the patrons. Referee Casey Berger, greatly alarmed, jumped into the melee and finally tore the queens apart. Gillem clambered back in first while Carole was trying to stop the claret. Then as Miss Starr waddled through the ropes Miss Gillem raced frantically across the ring and pounced upon her opponent to clutch the body press that won the match.

Koverly Mad

In the cofeature, Ernie Dusek came up with a body press after 29 hectic minutes to down Mad George Koverly. This displeased George, who felt he had been the victim of a cruel hoax, and he wanted to fight some more before he was finally led back to his cell.

Nanjo Singh used his cobra clutch to subdue Pat Healey, a newcomer, in 18 minutes. Healey, a gangling young man with a wisp of a mustache and enough gold in his mouth to qualify for Fort Knox, was sadly overmatched and he was one of the first to know it. He made some futile stabs at the sinister Singh, but when Nanjo located his Sunday hold the play was over.

Honest Patrick Fraley did away with Freddy Grobmier in 17½ minutes. Pat used something called an Australian toe hold to send Freddy home talking to himself.

Jim (Green Hornet) Henry and Stanley Pinto drew in a match which, strangely enough, featured Pinto as the hero. This is a far cry from other Pinto appearances in which the rugged Stanley has been branded as a dastardly fellow.

Emil Dusek won over porky Herbie Freeman in one of the best openers in months. Emil was suffering horribly all the way, but he rallied his waning strength to retire Herbie with a series of flying tackles and a body press after 17½ minutes of anguish. OSCAR ELDER.

New Orleans' Mayor Offers $5000 for Open

New Orleans, Nov. 27 (AP).—Mayor Robert S. M. Estri, who gave $25,000 in prize money to the New Orleans Open golf tournament during the first three years of its existence, today offered to donate $5000 for this year's tourney if the association now sponsoring the event would match the figure and let the public in free.

Last year, after the mayor had withdrawn his support, the event was placed on a paying basis. The purse was set at $5000, which, with other expenses, was raised by ticket sales.

Victory Ball To Honor Bill Dudley

Charlottesville, Va., Nov. 27.—"Dudley Day," tomorrow, is circled in red on calendars of University of Virginia students.

A Virginia victory ball, a special issue of the student newspaper, College Topics, and features in the December issue of the Virginia Spectator, student magazine, will center around William M. Dudley, of Bluefield, football hero of 1941 for the Cavalier team.

Sportswriters from leading newspapers in cities surrounding Charlottesville and faculty members of the university have been added to the already large guest list of the University Center, student organization sponsoring the ball. All varsity players during the season just ended and university athletic officials will share honors with Dudley at the affair.

Walls and balconies of Rotunda Hall, scene of the ball, will be hung with pennants and cards bearing scores of all the season's games, with the score of the Yale game, which Virginia lost 21 to 19, draped in black.

Immediately after the ball Dudley and several teammates will leave for Philadelphia to view the Army-Navy game. Sunday they will see another team with a "T" formation in operation when the Chicago Bears test it against the Philadelphia Eagles.

Gun Club Holds Meeting Tomorrow

The Washington Gun Club will hold its regular weekly meeting tomorrow on the club grounds, beginning at 2 p. m. Visitors are invited to try out their guns on the flying clay targets to practice for the hunting season.

Events will be at 50 and 25 targets, with practice events added to the program as desired.

Out Hunting With Jack Bell

Game Authorities Crack Down on Hunters

By Jack Bell

The Fish and Wildlife Service, game law enforcement authorities, have been cracking down recently on West Coast wild duck bootleggers. They now have cracked down on duck hunters of the Chesapeake Bay area for illegal baiting of

More than a dozen blinds along the Middle and Back Rivers section have been "padlocked" following a tour of duty by Federal Game Warden Walter W. McNamara and Maryland Deputy Game Warden E. C. Kerns.

JACK BELL

We have been told that a total of 55 blinds for wildfowl shooting in Maryland have been closed. Eleven of which are on Millers Island and Hart Island. Included are blinds on Poplar Island and along the shore in Talbot County, also Kent and lower Cecil Counties, where goose shooting is featured. Notices have been posted on blinds, considered as being in a baited area, shooting from which has been closed.

No one has actually been arrested and how long the "padlocking" of shooting blinds will be in force is not known at this time.

Considerable numbers of ducks are reported concentrated on bay areas, and on the lower and upper reaches of the Potomac River. However, very few are being killed. With the sudden cold weather and what little wind there has been, duck hunters are looking forward to some real shooting in the next few days.

Reports coming in from North Carolina are that results are most gratifying, due to the State's efficient conservation and management program. Two hundred and ninety-seven deer and seven bears have been killed in the Pisgah National Forest. The hunters in this area are closely supervised, and the hunts have reached the halfway mark.

Hub and Frank Parker, North Carolinian nimrods, had plenty of excitement in bringing down a 600-pound bear, in the Nantahala National Forest. It is the largest bear killed so far in the North Carolina season.

The bear put up a 2½-hour battle during which it wounded 12 of the 16 dogs in the hunt. Hub shot him eight times with a 30-30 rifle, but the bruin still was showing plenty of fight. Frank administered the coup de grace at close range with a load of buckshot.

Fred C. Bruckmann, Cincinnati, Ohio, hunter for the past four seasons has hunted the wild Russian boar of the wesetrn North Carolina mountains. This year he bagged the largest of the season so far, a 300-pounder, in the Nantahala National Forest near Robbinsville.

Bruckmann made his kill on one of the last of a series of hunts held each year under the cooperative management of the N. C. Game Division and the National Forest Service.

Russian boar were brought to western North Carolina by George Moore, an Englishman, about 30 years ago. It was Moore's idea to establish a hunting preserve in what is now a part of the Nantahala National Forest. He imported elk, buffalo and grizzly bear in addition to the Russian wild boar. Moore's dream of a gentleman's hunting preserve soon vanished; through neglect the fences rotted and the animals escaped and were killed off. The Russian boar alone survived in the wilds of the Santeelah section of the forest. North Carolina game authorities are making every effort to preserve these animals, thereby permitting them to be killed only under carefully planned and regulated hunts.

Smiling Bob Pyle, of Washington, returned home from lower Virginia, after a very successful two-day hunt in the Indian River swamp, below Richmond. Bob, as a guest of the Charles City Izaak Walton League, hunted out of the Chickahominy Rod and Gun Club.

Bob reports deer are plentiful and appear to be bigger and in better shape than in years past, as attested by the beautiful eight-point buck he shot. The method of hunting there is with hounds, and Bob says Lynwood and Eddie Orange have the finest pack of hounds in lower Virginia.

The Indian River swamp is part of a chain of swamps south of Richmond, this chain connecting on the north to Dismal swamp.

Green Bay In New York For Practice

Buford Ray May Miss Sunday Game Here; Other Packer Injured Improving

The Green Bay Packers are no exception when it comes to practicing for a game with the Redskins—they work against Sammy Baugh.

The Packers, who went directly to New York Monday after the Pittsburgh game instead of making the long trip back to Green Bay and then to Washington for Sunday's game, have been working out daily at Travers Island, near their quarters in the New York Athletic Club.

Coach Curly Lambeau, a charter member of the five-time league champions, has been working the Packers on a two-a-day practice schedule and they've been looking at passes twice a day.

Harold Van Every, the Minnesota triple-threat back of last year whose main forte is passing, has been Baugh to the Packer regulars and he has been completing an alarming number against the first club which includes the trio of Don Hutson, Clarke Hinkle and Cecil Isbell.

Unique Plays

Red Smith, the assistant Packer coach, has compiled scout reports on the Redskins and fed them to the second stringers who have been working Redskin plays against the first club. The Packers have been amazed at the Redskin repertoire, according to reports, and one of them was quoted yesterday after working against an unusual play as saying, "If they've got that one, I'd like to see it."

The Packer squad of 32 will be in good physical condition for their last game of the regular league schedule with one exception, Lee McLaughlin, the University of Virginia tackle, and Pete Tinsley, the stocky guard who missed last week's rout in Pittsburgh, will both be ready along with Charlie Brock and George Svendsen, who were in doubtful playing condition earlier in the week. Buford Ray, the 250-pound, 6-foot-6-inch tackle has been favoring a cracked rib and may be held out against the Redskins.

"Stop Hutson"

The Redskin injured, Dick Todd and Wilbur Moore, will get no closer to the Packers than their scout reports from last Sunday but the others with carry-over hurts will be in the best condition in several weeks. Wayne Millner and Ed Justice, two important men to any team with Sammy Baugh pitching passes, will be near their best playing condition.

The Redskins continued their pre-Packer workouts yesterday with the same theme—stop Don Hutson. The Packer end, along with Isbell, the league's leading passer, and Clark Hinkle, who is second in ground gaining, constitute most of the Green Bay offensive.

Game time has been moved up to 2 p. m. instead of the usual 2:30. A few hundred extra seats have been constructed this week and the crowd will be only a few short of the 36,000 mark.

The Packers arrive tonight at 7:30 and will stay at the Ambassador Hotel. They will practice tomorrow, probably at Georgetown University.

Brandywine Team Claims Grid Title

Finishing an undefeated season with 17 straight victories, the Brandywine Tigers 100-pounders defeated Janney, 12 to 0, at Alice Deal Junior High yesterday. Martin McMurray and Clarence Ketter each made a touchdown and Joe and Will Fahy also starred.

By their triumph, the Tigers claim the grid championship of Chevy Chase.

Johnstown Hands Boston First Loss

Johnstown, Pa., Nov. 27 (AP).—The Johnstown Bluebirds handed the Boston Olympics their first defeat of the season, 4-3, in a nip-and-tuck Eastern Amateur Hockey League game before 2000 fans tonight. The New Englanders had won seven straight.

Two fast goals within 31 seconds gave Boston a 3-2 lead at 12:53 of the third period. Johnstown deadlocked the count at 3-all on a tally by Dyck at 16:31, and with just two minutes remaining Vitarelli made good on a two-way assist from Anderson and Dyck to win the game.

'No Announcements,' Say Sugar Bowl Heads

New Orleans, Nov. 27 (AP).—The only word from Sugar Bowl headquarters following Texas' 23-0 beating of Texas A. and M. today was a statement by President A. N. Goldberg of the New Orleans Mid-winter Sports Association that "we don't expect to make any announcement tonight."

The latest run.or—before today—had been that the Aggies, if they beat Texas, would meet Duke in the Sugar Bowl.

Maryland Seeks 'Young' Football Coach

By Jack Munhall

University of Maryland is in the market for a "young" head football coach and director of athletics, and Bob Zuppke, late of Illinois, is not under consideration.

This much is known for certain about the topsy-turvy athletic situation at College Park, where natives and alumni are up in arms after a third disastrous football season in succession.

It is known also that President H. C. (Curly) Byrd is about to institute a far-reaching change in athletic policy, and that he will demand that Maryland develop football teams representative of a State university which annually meets tough opposition.

Lawrence May Be Chosen

Though Zuppke's name has been linked with the new deal at Maryland, it is known that Byrd does not want the aged coaching great of another era, but that he wants a "young and ambitious" man.

This man may be Harry L. Lawrence, highly successful football coach of Baltimore City College.

Lawrence, in his early thirties, is a graduate of Baltimore Poly and Western Maryland and has the solid backing of Maryland's powerful Baltimore alumni faction.

What is more, while at Western Maryland he played football under Dick Harlow, who is the football coach that Byrd really wants, and came close to getting. Harlow, it is now established, would today be Maryland's head football coach were it not for untimely publicity last spring, when Harlow was about to get his release from a coaching contract at Harvard.

Lawrence took over the coaching reins at Baltimore City College in 1935 and from midseason of that year until the past season his teams were undefeated, though tied several times by Baltimore Poly and Fork Union Military Academy.

City's lone defeat in 1935 was by Mount St. Joseph's and from that time on it has bowed to no Baltimore rival.

Job Is Open

Although the position of director of athletics has not been mentioned among the many reports concerning a change of Maryland football coaches, it is believed that Byrd is now ready to fill the job left vacant when Geary (Swede) Eppley was called into the Army last spring.

Jack Faber is now both head fotball coach and acting director of athletics, but he is certain to go.

Not that Byrd necessarily deems him incompetent, but because a change will have to be made to satisfy irate alumni.

Assistant Coaches Al Heagy and Al Woods, who like Faber are members of the Maryland faculty and coach other sports besides football, also are believed to be on their way out, as far as football is concerned.

President Byrd, remembering the unpleasantries of the Harlow episode, refuses to discuss the situation, but informed sources say that he is prepared to pay $18,000 for a football coaching staff. For this price the Terrapins could gather a crack department.

Cincinnati Turns Down Grid Clash

Cincinnati, Nov. 27 (INS).—University of Cincinnati athletic authorities tonight declined an invitation to play a post-season football game with Xavier University for the benefit of the United Service Organizations.

Xavier's coach, Clem Crowe, said his statement of several days ago still stands—that he was willing to recommend to the Xavier athletic board that permission be given for a post-season game "either at home or abroad for the USO or other worthy cause."

He added that any bowl invitations would be considered. Xavier has won eight of its nine games and meets Georgetown University Saturday in the season final.

W. & M., Va. Top All-State Grid Laurels

By the Associated Press

Richmond, Va., Nov. 27.—Old Dominion coaches looked over a squad of candidates—which for the first time in modern Virginia football history had produced a pair of once-beaten teams in a season—and came up with an all-State team dominated by cochampions Virginia and William and Mary.

When the scramble over key players on the two titlist squads ended, five Indians and four Cavaliers were lined up on the all-State team by the 24 State college coaches who picked the 1941 honor eleven for the Associated Press. They then annexed two V. M. I. backs to complete the mythical outfit.

It has been many seasons since an all-State team has left three "Big Six" members and all of the "Little Four" entirely in the cold.

Six members of the 1940 honor eleven were back in action this season and all but one were returned to the all-State team. Of these, three won the unanimous votes of the coaches—Bill Dudley, of Virginia, and Harvey Johnson, of W. and M., among the best backs the State has ever seen, and Gerrard Ramsey, W. and M. guard, a junior.

Billy Suhling, Virginia's junior center and line backer-up superb, ousted Virginia Tech's Bill Zydiak from the all-State center spot, which the Gobbler won in a walk last season. A rookie, Tex Warrington, W. and M., nosed out Barney Skladany, V. M. I. senior, for runner-up honors.

Big Joe Muha, V. M. I. wheelhorse back, is the other repeater on the honor team as a junior.

New all-Staters are Billy Preston, lanky U. V. A. pass-snagger, and Glenn Knox, the basketball high scorer of W. and M., on the ends; Harold Fields, W. and M., at tackle; John Sauerbeck, Virginia, at guard; and Abisha (Bosh) Pritchard, V. M. I., in the fourth backfield spot.

Happy Lark, Saddled by Don Yates, Takes Bowie Feature

Gus Ring's Old Rosebush Runs Second

Weatherite Finishes Third; $5.30 Price Paid by Winner; Yates in Comeback

By Walter Haight
A Staff Correspondent

Bowie, Md., Nov. 27.—They laughed when Donald Yates, the rotund Baltimorean, set out to train horses. They smiled when he had a half-mile string including Foggy Dawn, a filly who ran last almost invariably. They grinned when Yates disposed of his horses and they said, "We told you so." But Yates never lost confidence in himself. He warned his hecklers that some day he would get real horses and come back to change those smiles to scowls. Well, he did just that. He didn't make much noise about but slowly and surely he has staged the comeback that he predicted.

On the programs this year, in the trainer column has appeared the name "D. Yates" and that same name has been on the top of the charts many times in the last nine months. Behind Yates—trained horses have been those of an army of so-called big shot trainers.

Today, Yates saddled Mrs. Veader Leonard's Happy Lark and the 4-year-old galloped away with the fifth event, the best offering on the Thursday program. The son of Happy Time finished three lengths ahead of Gustave Ring's Old Rosebush and an additional three lengths in advance of Mrs. G. O. Russell's Weatherite.

Returns $5.30

Many of those who once laughed at Yates' training efforts were among those who collected the $5.30 mutuel on Happy Lark for he was the favorite in the field of eight and Yates always tries in races. Not only did Happy Lark outclass his opposition bu the was timed in 1:11 4-5, the best 6 furlongs of the present meeting.

Yates was a bit sad after the race, however, because Victor Emanuel claimed the horse for $5000 from Mrs. Leonard, the Baltimore owner. But Yates made a brilliant record with Happy Lark. He claimed the horse for $1500 at Tropical Park last winter. Under his conditioning, Happy Lark won ten races this year and took down purse money of $8158. In addition, Yates increased the value of the sprinter $3500.

Stewards' Statement

Regarding yesterday's form flip flop by Tanganyika, the stewards issued the following statement:

"After the running of the fourth race on November 26, the stewards called on L. G. Bedwell for an explanation of the running of the horse Tanganyika.

"Mr. Bedwell stated that Jockey Remerscheid had told him after the previous race in which Tanganyika ran that the horse had stepped in a hole on the upper turn and that he, Remerscheid, had pulled the horse up, thinking it had broken down."

This explanation came some 24 hours after Tanganyika had jogged home at long odds. While it seems the stewards have jumped to the defense of the Bedwell outfit, the statement says nothing of what happened to Tanganyika in three races prior to this "stepped-in-a-hole" angle. Owner H. G. (Honest Guy) Bedwell did not issue a statement.

DARK STREAM was well placed from the start, came through on the outside to improve his position and responded to a hard drive to dispose of MARKSMAN and win going away. MARKSMAN was in the thick of contention from the start, wore down STIMSTONE to take command and held on willingly, but was no match for the winner. WHEAT was taken up sharply leaving the gate, came between horses to improve his position and was closing ground at the end. STIMSTONE outran his rivals early, but weakened gradually in the final quarter.

ZOSTERA was rushed up on the outside to reach contention, was carried wide by BILL K. entering the stretch and rallied gamely to be up in the concluding strides. NILON, sluggish early, worked his way to the leaders gradually, came to the inside in the stretch and closed with good energy to barely miss. BILL K. was rushed to the front in the opening furlong, drew into a clear lead, drifted out entering the stretch and was tiring gradually at the end. TWO PLY was in the thick of forward contention early and weakened.

Daily Double, DARK STREAM and ZOSTERA, Paid $48.20

THIRD RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $1200. For 2-year-olds; allowances. Start good. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 2:07½. Off at 2:08. Winner, M. B. Goff's br. c. ALLEGHENY, first away, was vigorously handled to shake off DARE and had to be roused approaching the finish to withstand the rush of BOLA MOWLEE. The latter was allowed to race on his own courage early, lost much ground entering the stretch, closed with a bold rush and appeared close enough to warrant a photo, but the judges made the decision. DARE was rushed to press the pace of ALLEGHENY and tired slightly in the final test. HEARTS ENTWINE was rushed to contention leaving the backstretch and weakened.

Selections at Bowie.

Dear Al.

Although claims for horses are few and far between at a spring meeting at Bowie, the popularity of winter racing stimulates this method of obtaining horses in the fall. So far 28 horses have changed hands this way and they have been worth $60,500. The top priced claims to date were Hotzea and Happy Hunting which went for $3555 each. The meeting here is averaging $449,860 in daily betting. From Charles Town comes word that W. J. Daly, a member of the official family at that track, has humanely destroyed his jumper, Round Bend. Daly, who is far from a youngster but was a good steeplechase rider in his day. His last appearance in the saddle was astride this 11-year-old at the Far Rock Hunt and Round Bend was the winner that day in 1937. Maj. Goss L. Stryker, Laurel's president, will campaign two horses at Charles Town. These horses will be in charge of Trainer J. R. Booker. Jockey George Napier has reported to the West Virginia track. He had the highest percentage of winners at Pasoag, R. I. The officials, who have called for pictures when horses have finished a length apart this year, did not consult the camera at the end of yesterday's third race. Allegheny did not finish more than a neck in front of Bola Mowlee and the latter was nearest the camera. Sixty-one different trainers have won races at the meeting. Hirsch Jacobs tops the list with six. Two more programs here and then on to Charles Town where seven races will be run daily with the first post time at 1:30 p. m. Jockey Paul Kepler was absent yesterday. He had to go to the dentist. Maybe it was because the weather had a Florida tinge, but Jockey Don Meade was riding horses for keeps yesterday. He would have had another winner in Lupoba but the filly swerved in behind New Flower in the stretch drive of the fourth race. Jockey Eddie Smith, the Washington boy who has been riding in New England, will perform at the Charles Town meeting. Eddie is a good rider and a gentleman to boot. I received a note from one of the boys which reads: "Say, Fathead, why don't you parley Walter Haight and the Redskins?" The answer is I did. See you on the rail—BILL.

First race—DUTY FIRST showed enough to warrant a selection in this field. May take the main money at good odds. QUATRE BELLE gets in light and is dangerous. INCENTOR raced well last out.

Second race—MISS FIX IT loves this track. She gets 117 pounds, but I'm going to string along. OAK TAR won here last spring at a long price and will be a threat. RUGGED ROCK is fit and ready for the best.

Third race—SPARROW CHIRP seems to have this race locked up. I don't see how this gang is going to stop this one. NO ENDING is in good condition and will be in the money circle. PACK SADDLE is a long shot possibility.

Fourth race—MILK FLIP has shown enough to warrant the top pick in this affair for maidens. I see no reason for mistakes. DUSTY DULIN has shown speed on occasions and is dangerous. WAR SMOKE to take care of the others.

Fifth race—SOLAR STAR was a winner over this course and seems headed for another set of brackets. Needs only the right ride. POST HASTE and ONE LINK are the best of the others.

Sixth race—ARMY SONG may take the top on this gang and never look back. I'm going to take my chances with this one. MORDECAI failed us last out but is a threat in this company. ALPINE LAD to take care of the show end.

Seventh race—SUERTERO has been rested and appears well placed in this field. PROMPTO and MISRULE to fill out the money bracket.

Eighth race—RING STAR, DIZZY DAME and BOLD RISK is the way I prefer them in the day's finale.

Lincoln Routs Howard, 24-0

Philadelphia Team Wins Annual Game

D. C. Eleven Halted On 2-Yard Line; Lincoln Scores on Four Long Marches

By the Associated Press

Philadelphia, Nov. 27.—Lincoln University, of Oxford, Pa., easily defeated Howard University, of Washington, D. C., 24-0 today in the thirty-sixth annual Negro college football game at Shibe Park before 18,000 fans.

Ed Boyle, a 170-pound freshman from Baltimore, started Lincoln's attack with a 10-yard end around play to score the first touchdown shortly after the opening kick-off.

Howard kept Lincoln outside its 35-yard line the remainder of the period, aided by Mitchell's powerful kicking.

In the second quarter, Howard drove from its own 34 to Lincoln's 40 but was forced to kick. Lincoln kicked back and the Capital team began its most serious threat.

Banks hurled a pass to Carroll, who raced to Lincoln's 34, a gain of 16 yards. Carroll and Banks crashed to the 28. Then Banks shot a beautiful pass to Mitchell, who caught it with one hand and battered his way to the 4½-yard line. Lincoln stopped the drive and took over on the 2-yard line.

Lincoln, coached by Manuel Rivero (Columbia) and Jerome (Brud) Holland (Cornell), traveled 70, 60, 45 and 44 yards for its touchdowns.

William Burnett, a Philadelphian, counted two of Lincoln's scores, and Bill Hunter got the fourth with a brilliant 60-yard run in the third period.

During the intermission the fans were entertained by music and maneuvers from the 75-piece Fort Dix Band and 3000 soldiers of the 372d Infantry.

Bob Montgomery, Philadelphia's challenger for the lightweight boxing title, also appeared during the half time and selected "Miss Classic" from among five beauties.

Brewer Five Meets Eagles Here Tonight

The Washington Brewers will engage the Detroit Eagles tonight at Turner's Arena at 9 o'clock.

The Brewers got off to a winning start in the opening contest of the American Basketball League last Wednesday when they nosed out the Wilmington Blue Bombers in Wilmington 43-42.

The Eagles, world's professional champions, will present one of the leading players of the pro tournament of last year in the person of Harry (Bud) Jeanette.

Coach Mack Posnack of the Brewers, put his squad through a long workout yesterday at Georgetown University's gym. The Brewers scrimmaged with the Hoya team, and Posnack ordered plays designed to offset the fancy back-court maneuvers which Dutch Dehnert's Eagles will fling at them tonight. Dehnert is the former New York Celtics' star who coached the Detroit club to the $5000 professional championship in the tournament in Chicago last March.

The Eagles in winning the tournament knocked off such outfits as the Renaissance, the Globe Trotters, 1940 champions, and the Oshkosh All-Stars in the finals.

Three erstwhile All-Americans dot the visiting lineup. Two are John (Jake) Ahearn, guard, and Jerry Bush, a guard shifted to center, who won their spurs at St. Jonn's University, Brooklyn, where Coach Posnack helped make history as a member of the great "Wonder Five." Another former All-American is James (Jimsy) Brown, Temple University Ed Perry, a Detroiter, is the other veteran on the squad.

New players signed up are Paul Widowitz and Lou Kasterik, of Duquesne University, and Bill McKeever, of the New York State League.

DOOLEY, from Page 27.

Blaik, in his eagerness to rehabilitate Army's shattered football fortunes quickly, brought the team to its peak of effectiveness too fast. This was born out in its showing against Harvard, which beat the Cadets decisively. The question is, can Blaik get his team back to the psychological heights it enjoyed on the eve of the Notre Dame game?

Army's close call with a rugged West Virginia team last Saturday indicates that the West Pointers are not clicking with the perfection they will need to beat a team of Navy's inherent potential strength. There is no denying that Navy this year is the best outfit to represent the Academy on the banks of the Severn in more than a decade. It is a big, hard hitting, fast thinking outfit that is soundly coached, and motivated by a splendid spirit.

I believe Navy will beat Army, despite the ability of Coach Blaik to point for an objective.

Any service battle is certain to be hard fought, and I am not overlooking the fact that Army has a trio of splendid and gallant-hearted backs who can run, and kick and pass. Nor am I forgetful of Army's line, the handiwork of Harry Elinger, as talented a tutor of forward walls as can be found in the football circuit. But Navy has a wealth of reserve talent, and Army is thin in reserves. And reserves may very well tell the story. No team is stronger than its substitutes.

Other Good Battles

Other good games tomorrow are the Fordham-N. Y. U. battle, Mississippi's meeting with Mississippi State, Nebraska's clash with Oklahoma, Texas Christian's battle with Southern Methodist, Tulane's scrap with Louisiana State, and Stanford's feud with California. The Oregon and Oregon State game is also one for the book, as Oregon State has the inside edge for a Rose Bowl bid. N. Y. U. has had a most disastrous season, despite the ability of Dr. Marvin A. Stevens, who has shown repeatedly in the past that he is among the most intelligent and progressive coaches in the game. It is the old story of a mentor being unable to produce unless he has the material. N. Y. U. lost 12 men to the Army, and six of those men were of first-class quality.

Despite the fact the Violets have been slammed and booted around mercilessly all season by teams distinctly out of their class, a huge crowd will turn out to see the game because they know that N. Y. U. is always a dangerous team when it meets Fordham. Once before it spoiled Fordham's record and ruined its chance for a bowl bid, and it is eager to do so again. Right now there are several gentlemen sitting around New York hotels waiting to see how Fordham fares against the Violets before offering them a bowl bid.

I believe Fordham has too much power this year to be stopped by N. Y. U., even when the Violets are playing beyond themselves. With the sophomore sensations, Joe Andrejo and George Cheverko, teamed up with the veteran Steve Filipowicz, Fordham's candidate for all-America fullback honors, there will be much difficulty in stopping the Ram offense. Filipowicz will give N. Y. U.'s defense a busy time all afternoon with his overhead shots.

FORECAST FOR TOMORROW'S GAMES

Arizona over Kansas State.
Clemson over Auburn.
Boston College over Holy Cross.
Fordham over N. Y. U.
Marquette over Iowa State.
Mississippi over Mississippi State.
Nebraska over Oklahoma.
Oregon State over Oregon.

Washington over Southern California.

Navy Eleven Given Rousing Departure

NAVY, from Page 27.

Ohio, will be at a guard position instead of Art Knox injured 184-pounder of Painesville Ohio.

The gridders, out to make it three in a row over Army, are scheduled to work out at Temple University's stadium tomorrow afternoon. At today's session the Sailors went through a dummy scrimmage and had a last look at West Point plays.

Middies to Parade

A mammoth parade of the midshipmen and cadet regiments, 4800 strong, will precede the kickoff, scheduled for 1:30 p. m., Eastern standard time. Early Saturday the midshipmen, en route to the railroad station here, will toss pennies and nickels at the statue of Tecumseh, the Indian chieftain, for good luck.

Both Mellissa, a homely female Schnauzer dog who consistently has put the whammy on the opposition, and Bill IX, Navy's goat, will make the trip.

Winchester to See Pro Rassle Match

Special Dispatch to The Post

Winchester, Va., Nov. 27.—For the first time in local sports history a professional wrestling program will be presented on Wednesday night, December 3, as the third of a series of winter sports programs sponsored by local legionnaires.

In the main event Pat Fraley, and Milo Steinborn will struggle for one fall with an hour limit placed on the match. The semifinal event will present Lou Plummer and Leo Numa with a 30-minute limit on the fall.

Durocher Frets—Trading Season Is Here

By the Associated Press

Brooklyn, Nov. 27.—Leo Durocher, with Hollywood's grease paint all wiped off, is back at the job of managing the Brooklyn Dodgers and frothing over with ideas about winter trades.

"I want a pitcher, an outfielder, an infielder and a catcher," he said in an inventory today. This sounded like the National League champions needed everything except a batboy, but Durocher quickly explained that his desires were in reality modest and that his only pressing problem was to locate a pitcher.

"I'd like to have a good left-hander, because I figure we were handicapped plenty without one last season. But a good pitcher is a good pitcher and if I can't get a lefty I'd be glad to get a real first-class right-hander. Every club would," he added.

Beyond a starting hurler, Durocher's wants, in order, are a right-handed hitting outfielder, a utility infielder who can step in at any position, and catcher who can take 50 games off the schedule for little Mickey Owen.

Reds Look Good

"In planning deals you've got to figure who you've got to beat," he elaborated. "We've got to beat the Cardinals, especially those three tough left-handers—White, Pollet and Lanier. That's why I want to get another right-handed hitter.

"Of course, we've got to beat those Reds, too. Yeh, the Reds. I think they're going to be tough again next year. They're a better ball club than they showed last season. In fact, they were plenty good after last June."

Durocher said the reason he was searching for a reserve infielder was that Claude Corbett, slated to come up from the Dodgers' Montreal farm, might be drafted into the Army. He still was counting on Cookie Lavagetto as his third baseman and the rest of his infield was set.

Then he reached his catching problem.

Owen Wants Help

"I want to trade Babe Phelps," he declared, "but I'm not going to give him away. If anybody thinks he can be picked up for waiver money, $7500, or that I'm going to let Luke Hamlin (right-handed pitcher) go for that kind of dough, he's crazy. Unless we can make a deal which will help us and which brings us what these men are worth, they'll be on our ball club next spring.

"Owen is my regular catcher, but he needs help. He was 9 pounds under weight at camp last year and he got worse instead of better during the season. I had to catch him in both ends of double-headers sometimes, and work him hard all year. I don't think he should catch more than 90 or 100 games to be at his best."

Durocher said he would sign a new contract as manager whenever President Lary MacPhail gets around to it.

"We've been talking about other things and the matter has never been mentioned. One of these days MacPhail will shove a piece of paper at me and say 'sign this,' and I'll sign. I'll look at the figure first, though."

Los Angeles Club Returns Dodger Hurler

Brooklyn, Nov. 27 (AP).—President Larry MacPhail of the Brooklyn Dodgers said tonight that the Los Angeles Club of the Pacific Coast League had returned Pitcher Mace Brown, who was sent to the Angels late this season.

MacPhail said waivers had been asked on the former star relief hurler, who was purchased in midseason from the Pittsburgh Pirates, and that if he were not claimed he would be assigned to some other minor league club.

Happy Sun Bowl Officials Foresee Big Border Classic

By the Associated Press

Albuquerque, Nov. 27.—If Sun Bowl officials wear smug countenances these days all out of proportion with the brisk fall weather, just put it down to contemplation of the best prospects in years for the annual border football classic.

Because it's pretty hard to see how the border conference can miss fielding one of the best host teams in the seven years of the Sun Bowl at El Paso on January 1.

The host team always represents the border conference, chosen by faculty poll and invariably the conference champion. The opposing team is selected by the bowl committee.

Arizona University, undefeated in five conference games, is the logical conference choice. Should Arizona decline, however, the Red Raiders of Texas Tech or Hardin-Simmons University—also undefeated in the conference—are available.

The cactus loop has yet to win its first bowl victory.

The border conference season does not close until December 6, but Sun Bowl officials have indicated they will seek to have Conference Commissioner E. L. Larson, of Tucson, conduct the bowl poll next week.

While the likely unanimous choice, Arizona has hinted it might not accept should it show badly against Kansas State and Utah, its remaining opponents. The Wildcats were jolted last Saturday by Oklahoma A. and M., 41 to 14. Arizona's only other defeat was by Notre Dame in the opening game.

Texas Tech, a perfect schedule marred by a 6-0 upset by Miami University, probably would be the second choice, providing it gets by Wake Forrest Saturday. Tech was ineligible for the conference championship because it played one less than the required three conference games.

Hardin-Simmons, whipped by Texas Tech and Baylor, probably would be next in line.

U.S. Must Build Secure World, Dr. Elliott Says

The United States "cannot escape its duty of world leadership," Dr. William Yandell Elliott, of Harvard University, consultant to the Office of Production Management, declared last night. "We must create a secure world," he said, "in which we do not have to depend upon the good faith of Hitler."

Dr. Elliott spoke in the Department of Commerce auditorium before an audience of nearly 500 persons, opening a three-day conference on public discussion methods attended by women graduates of ten girls' colleges in Washington and nearby States. The international relations committee of the local branch of the American Association of University Women, in consultation with the Office of Civilian Defense, is host to the visitors.

Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt was chairman of the program last night. She stated that in the OCD, "we consider your work very valuable." Participants in a discussion on Mr. Elliott's remarks were: Eloise Davidson, of ODC, Senator Claude Pepper (Democrat), of Florida; Representative John M. Vorys (Republican), of Ohio, and Representative Hatton Sumners (Democrat), of Texas. Mrs. James V. Bennett was program chairman.

Representative Vorys declared his opposition to an A. E. F., while Senator Pepper asserted, "Our foreign policy is to utterly crush Adolf Hitler." Representative Sumners disagreed with Dr. Elliott's view on America's defense efforts, saying, "We are not doing a good job."

Purpose of the conference is to teach the women delegates the techniques of public discussion, so they may return to their communities and take a more intelligent part in this type of activity. All-day sessions will be held today and tomorrow at Pierce Hall, Sixteenth and Harvard Streets Northwest.

J. D. Drake Dies; Former Assistant Commerce Chief

Pontiac, Mich., Nov. 27 (AP).—J. Walter Drake, 66, former president of the Hupp Motor Car Co. and a former Assistant Secretary of Commerce, died tonight at his home on Lake Angelus, near Pontiac. He had been ill two months.

Drake recently had been planning a reorganization of the Hupp concern which he founded in 1908. The firm has been in receivership.

In June, 1923, Drake became assistant to Herbert Hoover, then Secretary of Commerce. He resigned his post in 1927, returning to Detroit to take an active part in the Hoover Presidential campaign.

Drake, a native of Sturgis, Mich., was director of several national organizations during his career, including the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce and the United States Chamber of Commerce. He also was director of the Foreign Trade Council and the Manufacturers Exchange Association.

Mrs. Johnson, Former Musical Comedy Star, Dies

Funeral services for Mrs. F. W. Johnson, known back in the gaslight days as Kitty O'Neill, musical comedy star, will be held at 10 a. m. tomorrow at St. Peter's Church, Second and C Streets Southeast. Burial will be in Washington Memorial Cemetery.

Mrs. Johnson, who was 87, was known as an outstanding beauty and talented artist back in the 80s. As Kitty O'Neill, she first appeared here in old Albaugh's Theater, later Poli's, in 1880, with Ed Rice's "1492," which featured the beauties of the troupe framed as "living pictures" in various poses. She appeared in many cities of the country and met her husband, F. W. Johnson, a musician, on tour. Mr. Johnson died last December 24. Mr. and Mrs. Johnson had lived with the former's daughter, Mrs. Benjamin H. Greene, 512 First Street Southeast.

Mrs. Johnson died last Tuesday of grief over her husband's death, her daughter said.

Contract Bridge

"Yesterday morning in a commuters' game, on the Erie Railroad, occurred a hand from which it will take me some time to recover, writes Contributor C. R. B. concerning a hand which looked good for a grand slam but on which he was set three.

"With both sides vulnerable my partner opened the bidding with one heart," he continues. "Imagine my feelings when I picked up these cards:

"Probably my best bid would be three clubs to find if my partner had a fit in that suit, but time being short, I took the bull by the horns and bid seven spades—result, down three."

"A small diamond was opened by East, taken by the ace in my hand. The only way to get into South's hand is to ruff the third round of clubs and toss the fourth club on the top diamond or heart.

Police Force Does Good Job for Its Size, Kelly Says

Considering the small size of the force, Washington's policemen are rendering "excellent service," Chief Edward J. Kelly told the Federation of Businessmen's Associations at its monthly dinner meeting last night in the Hay-Adams House.

Kelly said that the average residence patrolman covers 60 blocks. For good operation, he should have to patrol only 12 blocks, he explained.

It was American Legion night for the club and other speakers included Heywood Saunders, commander of the District American Legion, and Clement Murphy, chief of the Fire Department's training school and chief air raid warden.

Both of the men urged the need of a well-organized air raid warden service. Saunders declaring that there is "a definite danger of an invasion of Washington."

Stimson Brands Parran Charges As Inaccurate

Secretary of War Stimson yesterday branded as "quite inaccurate" a report on the handling of venereal disease in the United States Army contained in a recent book by Dr. Thomas Parran, surgeon general of the Public Health Service, and Dr. R. A. Vonderlehr, assistant surgeon general.

At a press conference yesterday, Secretary Stimson said:

"I regard it as my duty to prepare as best I can for a foreign war and not, so to speak, for a civil war between various departments of the Government. I look for help in any direction and I have read this book. I would not be fair to my own department if I did not say that I believe the impression given by the book is quite inaccurate."

The book, "Plain Words About Venereal Disease," criticized allegedly dilatory tactics by the War Department, adding that prostitutes in trailer camps near Army posts are largely responsible for the sharp rise in the Army venereal rate.

BLAME YOUR LAZY LIVER BILE IF-

CONSTIPATION with its headaches, mental dullness and that "half-alive" feeling may often result when your liver doesn't secrete 20 to 30 ounces of bile every day into your intestines. So you see how important it is to keep bile flowing freely! And what finer aid could one desire than Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets, used so successfully for years by Dr. F. M. Edwards for treating his patients for constipation and sluggish liver bile.

Olive Tablets are unsurpassed in effectiveness because they stir up liver bile secretion to help digest fatty foods, they tone up muscular intestinal action, at the same time help elimination. Being purely vegetable, Olive Tablets are wonderful! Test their supreme goodness TONIGHT! 15¢, 30¢,

Note—To buy defense bonds and stamps, go to the nearest postoffice, bank or savings and loan association, or write to the Treasurer of the United States, Washington, D. C. Also stamps are now on sale at retail stores.

Treasury to Float Record 1½ Billion Loan

Secretary Morgenthau announced last night that the Treasury would borrow 1½ billion dollars from the public next week in the largest single cash borrowing operation since World War days.

The borrowing will top by 200 million dollars the former record set only a few weeks ago.

While details of the borrowing will not be determined until after a conference between Treasury and Federal Reserve officials next Tuesday, the borrowing will boost the Federal debt to more than 56 billion dollars, or within nine billion dollars of the debt limti.

Similar huge borrowing operations are scheduled at the rate of about one every two months for at least the next year, because of the mounting deficits resulting from the defense program. Since the present fiscal year began on July 1, the Treasury already has spent $8,720,568,534 and has incurred a deficit of $5,827,848,879, which has had to be made up from this type of public borrowing, the sale of defense bonds to small investors, and borrowing from Social Security and other Government trust funds.

Defense costs, alone, in this period were $6,151,013,228. These expenditures are now running about $1,500,000,000 a month and are expected to reach two billion dollars a month in the spring.

Morgenthau also said that any refunding operations of the Treasury would be postponed until January, when a maximum of $1,075,000,000 of both Treasury and Government corporation securities may be replaced with new Treasury securities.

I. B. A. Urges Revision of Capital Gains-Loss Law

The Investment Bankers Association urged Congress yesterday to change the Federal treatment of capital gains and losses so as to remove what it called "the penalty imposed upon shifting investments."

"Under the present income tax levy," the association said in a letter to chairmen of Senate and House tax committees, "you can trade a horse for a horse without paying a tax, but if you trade a horse for a buggy, then the tax effects must be figured."

In a letter written by Harcourt Amory, of Boston, chairman of the I. B. A.'s federal taxation committee, added:

"This is because the law provides that property of like kind can be exchanged without the recognition of gain or loss, but property of unlike kind cannot. The law specifically provides, moreover, that in the case of stocks and bonds, gain or loss must be computed on transactions.

"It is difficult to see why two individuals cannot exchange bonds which they hold in different companies without paying a tax. There is no cash realization of profit in such a transaciton, and still the law provides that each must compute his gain or loss at that time at the current value in accordance with his particular basis."

The I. B. A. proposed these changes in the tax structure:

"Segregate capital gains and losses, regardless of the time for which the asset has been held.

"If a capital net gain results, tax the first $5000 of such gain at 5 per cent, the next $20,000 at 10 per cent, and the balance over $25,000 at 15 per cent.

"If a capital net loss results, do not allow such loss against ordinary income, but permit the loss to be carried forward for two years to apply against any capital gains which occur in such subsequent years.

"Define one who engages in speculation so as to take in the day-by-day trader. In other words, if a person makes his living by stock transactions, for example, he should pay the same tax on his income as is paid by a man with the same income from a salary."

Plans for Fixing Furniture Prices Suspended

Price Administrator Leon Henderson said yesterday that plans for a price ceiling on wooden household furniture had been suspended for the present.

Since November 10, when OPA first disclosed that maximum prices on furniture were in preparation, Henderson said, the upward trend in prices had leveled off. He added that there now appeared to be "little likelihood at present of further increases."

Postponement of ceiling action will enable manufacturers to proceed with plans for introduction of new models on the January market. Henderson said January would mark the next critical point in the furniture price situation.

"In the meanwhile," he added, "furniture prices will be watched closely by my office. Should it become apparent that resumption of the upward trend is imminent, a maximum price schedule will be issued based on the price level prevailing at the November markets."

Morgan Stanley to Become Partnership

New York, Nov. 27 (AP).—Morgan Stanley & Co., Inc., big Wall Street investment banking offshoot of J. P. Morgan & Co., will be dissolved before January 1 and a new firm, a general partnership including most of the officers of the present firm, will succeed to the business, it wa sannounced today.

Spokesmen for the firm said the change from a corporate status to that of a partnership was designed to give the firm more flexibility in dealing with a changing investment situation.

"What a partnership can do on the one hand a corporation is forbidden to do on the other and at times this situation is reversed," a partner of the firm said.

"However, after long consideration of the question we have decided that a partnership will be an advantage to us in the over-all picture and we have therefore decided to make the change."

It was pointed out by others that an instance of this flexibility is that the new firm, as a partnership would be able to hold membership on the New York Stock Exchange whereas the corporation could not.

A partner explained, however, that the question of applying for membership on the exchange had not yet been taken up.

Capital Transit Declares Extra 25c Dividend

Directors of Capital Transit Co. yesterday declared an extra dividend of 25 cents a share in addition to a regular quarterly dividend of 25 cents on the common stock.

The action meant the first extra dividend in the common stock's history and the first time that the issue had been placed on a regular dividend basis. Three quarterly dividends of 25 cents each had been paid previously this year. Last year, a total of $1 in dividends was paid.

Both dividends are payable December 20 to stockholders of record December 4. As 240,000 shares of common stock are outstanding, the disbursement late next month will aggregate $120,000.

Listed on the Washington Stock Exchange, Capital Transit stock yesterday held unchanged at 15 bid and 15½ asked. Fifty shares were traded at 15, off ⅛ from the previous transaction.

The extra dividend reflected sharp improvement in the transit earnings this year. During the first nine months of 1941, net income totaled $857,856 or $3.56 a share. In the same period last year net income totaled $564,310 or $2.34 a share.

Although gross revenues in October ran well ahead of last year, net earnings for the month are expected to show a decline. Increased taxes and allowance for a wage advance were cited as factors in the expected reduction in balance available for common stock. The October report will be filed with the Public Utilities Commission shortly.

Freight Loadings Show 9% Gain Over Year Ago

By the Associated Press

The Association of American Railroads reported yesterday that 799,386 cars of revenue freight were loaded during the week ended last Saturday.

This was a decrease of 84,453 cars, or 9.6 per cent, compared with the preceding week; an increase of 65,898 cars, or 9.0 per cent, compared with a year ago, and an increase of 126,273 cars, or 18.8 per cent, compared with 1939.

Excepting grain, all classifications showed declines, particularly coal, less-than-carlot merchandise and miscellaneous freight. The decline in total loadings, however, was less than seasonally expected.

The Associated Press seasonally adjusted index of loadings, based on 1929-30 as 100, advanced to 90.2 compared with 90.0 the previous week, and 77.5 a year ago.

The company is engaged principally in ship repair, reconditioning and conversion work on oceangoing vessels.

Chicago Grain

Chicago, Nov. 27 (AP).—Grain prices gained fractions to more than a cent a bushel and soybeans more than 3 cents today in a general recovery movement.

Some of the buying was inspired by the fact that recent declines had carried prices in most cases to the lowest levels for a month. Purchasing also was attributed to defeat of the Gore admendment to price control legislation. Belief that producers may curtail marketings of wheat and corn, inasmuch as prices had dipped about 3 cents for wheat and more than 10 cents for corn below Government loan rates on a Chicago basis, also was a factor.

Wheat closed ½@1¼ cents higher than yesterday, December, 1.23@1.12⅞; May, 1.19@1.18⅞. Corn, ¼@⅝ up, December, 72⅞@72⅝; May, 79. Oats, ⅝@1⅜ up. Rye, 1@1¼ higher. Soybeans, 2⅜@3½ higher.

Naval Stores Mart Closed

Savannah, Nov. 27 (AP).—Savannah naval stores market closed today, Thanksgiving Day.

Select Issues Buck Retreat In Stock List

New York, Nov. 27.—Steels, rails and specialties were fairly successful in contesting selling in today's stock market but many leaders were notably apathetic toward recovery.

Sufficient bidding came in during the final hour to stiffen trends generally and closing prices were no worse than moderately irregular although declines of fractions to a point or so were a shade in the majority.

The Associated Press average of 60 stocks finished with a net loss of .1 of a point at 39.3, where it was only .2 above the year's bottom established last April. It was the fifth successive session in which this composite had been unable to emerge with a plus sign.

More Tax Selling

Tax offerings again accounted for a sizable portion of the day's turnover and had much to do with putting a wide assortment of issues at new 1941 lows. Transfers totaled 811,480 shares compared with 650,600 the day before.

The flow of heartening dividends and earnings statements continued as a prop for individual stocks but was ignored in many cases. Inspiring a little support also was the thought the market was in a position to put on a good revival if the news warranted.

Remaining as antibullish arguments were: The United States-Japanese crisis, cloudy war developments in Russia and Africa, the far from clear labor picture, tax fears and the price-control battle in Congress.

Pivotal Issues Drop

Among stocks in arrears were General Motors, Goodyear, Sears Roebuck, American Telephone, Consolidated Edison, Public Service of New Jersey, Kennecott, International Nickel, Standard Oil (New Jersey), Du Pont, Westinghouse, Allied Chemical, Eastman Kodak, J. C. Penney, Philip Morris, Reynolds Tobacco "B" and American Tobacco "B." The tobaccos shaved forenoon losses substantially and Liggett & Myers "B" ended with a modest gain.

On the upside were U. S. Steel, Bethlehem, Youngstown Sheet, Chrysler, U. S. Rubber, Southern Pacific, Chesapeake & Ohio, Montgomery Ward, International Harvester, Douglas Aircraft, Consolidated Aircraft, Eastern Air Lines and Johns-Manville.

Bonds were mixed. Commodities did better in the afternoon. At Chicago wheat was up ½ to 1¼ cents a bushel, corn ahead ¼ to ⅝ and hogs steady to 10 cents higher. Colton was up 20 to 45 cents a bale.

Among forward movers in the Curb were Midvale, Gulf Oil, Aluminum of America, American Cyanamid "B" and N. J. Zinc. Lower were Brewster Aero, International Petroleum, Sherwin Williams and Pepperell. Volume here approximated 203,000 shares versus 215,000 yesterday.

You're going to hear a lot about the Community Chest—as well you should—over WJSV today.

For today marks the first day of overtime in the Chest's annual drive for funds which will provide aid for the needy of the District for the coming year. And the lamentable fact is that, at this late stage of the drive, the quota is only two-thirds filled. Things must be done immediately to correct such an error—and WJSV intends to go all out in doing its part in such a worthy enterprise.

Accordingly, from 6 a. m. today, until its closing down hour of 1 a. m. Saturday, every single WJSV program, every available bit of time for a spot announcement on WJSV, will be given over to an appeal to Washington's citizenry to do right by their Community Chest—which is no more than right, we're sure you'll all agree.

Arthur Godfrey will tell you about it on the "Sun Dial;" Elinor Lee will do her part in her afternoon program; Bob Pace, Nancy Dixon, Arch McDonald, all WJSV's announcers at every station break, will do their utmost to bring home to you the desperate urgency of the situation and to appeal to you to do what you can about it.

A. D. Willard, jr., WJSV's general manager, in asking the all-out cooperation of the staff—very willingly given, it may be added—pointed out that Washington certainly will be a better place to live in if the Community Chest campaign is successful.

Dr. Torrance Is 'Presumed' To Be Guilty

By the Associated Press

Monterrey, Mexico, Nov. 27.—Portly Dr. Arthur Torrance heard a judge today order him held for further investigation of a "strong presumption of guilt" that he bludgeoned to death his wealthy, 67-year-old bride, the former Mrs. Ada Loveland, of Kalamazoo, Mich.

A 38-page brief, read in Spanish and interpreted to the author and explorer, informed him that Judge Jesus B. Santos wanted further information on "the evidence that other women might be involved," "the possibliity that Torrance was trying to get money from Mrs. Loveland," "the hasty burial" and several other factors.

Torrance is charged with beating his wife to death with a vacuum bottle, but the 55-year-old New Yorker contends she was injured fatally in an auto accident near Monterrey.

Judge Santos informed Torrance his ruling today did not constitute a final decision. Under Mexican law the defendant may appeal the order. Defense attorneys, who said they would appeal, have until Monday afternoon to take such action.

The names of Miss Barbara Bowen, 28-year-old Honolulu society girl, and Miss Vera Bowyer, of San Francisco, were injected into the trial yesterday.

Judge Santos said then he had telegraphed San Francisco police for a statement from Miss Bowen, who reportedly came to the mainland to marry Torrance, not knowing he was honeymooning in Mexico. Torrance also testified that on the day of his wife's death he sent a telegram to Miss Bowyer which began "Dearest, withhold judgment."

The wire was offered for the record by Richard Loveland, of Los Angeles who first accused Torrance of slaying his mother.

Accusations Listed

Other reasons the judge listed for holding Torrance included:

"The fact that broken glass from a vacuum bottle was found in the sleeve of the woman's dress.

"The imprecise answers and changes in Torrance's testimony.

"The lack of damage to the car after Torrance said it had been in an accident.

"Patent contradictions in his testimony.

"The possibility that the vacuum bottle, with water in it, was used as a weapon.

"And the fire by a river in which a man identified as Torrance burned a vacuum bottle."

The prosecution and Loveland have sought to establish that Mrs. Torrance was slain for financial gain. Torrance, however, asserted he had paid all expenses since the couple left Michigan and that his wife had no more money than he.

One Killed, 24 Hurt in Two N.Y.-Floridd Train Accidents

By the Associated Press

Hortense, Ga., Nov. 27.—One man was killed and at least 24 persons were injured today when two New York-to-Florida passenger trains of the Atlantic Coast Line were derailed in separate accidents that occurred within the same hour, one near here and the other at Dover, Fla.

Crushed to death as seven cars of the streamlined Tamiani Champion overturned south of Hortense was a middle-aged man tentatively identified as John Carroll, of 188 Eighteenth Street, Cleveland, Ohio. He had a ticket from Richmond, Va., to Jacksonville, Fla.

About 300 miles away, on Florida's west coast, the Havana Special was derailed shortly before 6 a. m., just after leaving Dover, 10 miles from Tampa. Eight persons were injured but only two required hospitalization. The entire seven-car train left the rails but only three cars overturned.

In neither wreck was there any evidence of sabotage, E. B. Rush, superintendent of transportation in the railroad's Southern division offices, said at Jacksonville, Fla.

The Tamiami Champion wrecked in south Georgia's turpentine belt, near the Satilla River. Doctors who administered first aid before sending the injured to the A. C. L. hospital at Waycross had to wade knee-deep through roadbed ditches to reach the passengers.

At Corinth, Miss., meanwhile, a dining-car chef, Elmer Hutson, of Fulton, Ky., died of burns received last Sunday when eight cars of the Illinois Central's Seminole overturned near there.

Maryland Couple Seized in Wine Raid

Hagerstown, Md., Nov. 27.—Mr. and Mrs. Roy Rudy, Pondsville, Md., were arrested by Federal Investigator Charles E. Cushwa after he had seized 120 gallons of wine, and were charged with manufacturing wine without a Federal permit and selling wine in violation of the internal revenue laws.
